The Talented Teachers Act would be directed at high school students in the top 10 percent of their classes. It would offer 10,000 scholarships of up to $5,000 a year over a four-year period. In return, the recipients would pledge to teach in public or nonprofit private schools for two years for each year of aid received. In most cases that would translate into eight years. Those who agreed to teach in poor school districts would have to remain for only four years.

The bill also offers two one-year fellowships per Congressional district of up to $20,000 to practicing teachers selected on the basis of merit. The grant could be used for study, research, travel or other professional self-improvement.

The bill would cost only $33.5 million for the first year and less than $200 million for its four-year experimental duration. In the words of Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, it would "send out a clear message that being a teacher is something to be proud of."

The bill recently passed the House with virtually no opposition, but now it has become entangled in procedural wrangling in the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources. If only it can be freed for Senate approval in the few days left in the current session, then the 98th Congress would have at least dispatched the first small unit of elite troops so desperately needed in the battle for excellence in education.●

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN HOPE, III

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I join with the staff of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights and his many friends in paying tribute to John Hope, III who died on September 23, 1984.

Mr. Hope was 48 years old. His 25-year public service career encompassed concerns of local government, international development and civil rights. Early in his professional life, he worked as a management specialist with the New York City Housing Authority and Nassau County, NY. His career expanded when he joined the Africa Bureau of the Agency for International Development, in May 1965, and subsequently became Africa program Coordinator for the Peace Corps. He served as Peace Corps Country Director for Uganda from May 1969 until January 1971, when he took over direction of Peace Corps activity in the Philippines, its second-largest program.

From February 1972 until his death, he served as a senior staff member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. As deputy director and director of its Office of Program and Policy Review, he was responsible for the Commission's major social science research activity. Under his direction, for example, Commission staff prepared the four-report series assessing the state of civil rights 20 years after Brown, a variety of reports on the progress of school desegregation throughout the United States, and an evaluation of minority political participation in the first 10 years of the Voting Rights Act that was widely used in Congressional deliberation on extension of the act in 1975. He provided the impetus for Commission research in less traditional areas, such as equal opportunity in unions, the role of minorities and women in television, and developing more adequate indicators of the socioeconomic status of women and minority men in America life.

Mr. Hope served also for 3 years as Deputy Staff Director of the Commission, responsible for its day-to-day management. In addition to his administrative responsibilities, he coordinated the agency's program activity and, during this period, played a key role in reorienting the Commission's oversight function to providing short term, policy-relevant information on Federal civil rights enforcement activity and issues to the President and Congress.

In his greatest service, however, Mr. Hope was Acting Staff Director of the Commission on Civil Rights from July 1981 until mid-August 1983, a time of budgetary retrenchment, great controversy about the makeup of the Commission, and uncertainty about the agency's continued existence. Despite this turmoil, under his leadership, the staff continued to carry out its responsibilities in a manner that permitted the Commission, for example, to provide the Congress a detailed study for its 1982 deliberations on the Voting Rights Act, conduct hearings on a range of subjects, and expand its oversight role. He was as dedicated to maintaining the Commission's integrity and independence as he was committed to achieving equal justice in our Nation.

More recently, Mr. Hope, a charter member of the senior executive service and a career civil servant, directed the Commission's regional operations, including the activities of citizen advisory committees in each State and the District of Columbia. He also served for 2 years on the Fairfax County Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Hope received his A.B. in political science from Morehouse College in Atlanta, GA, and master of public administration degree from New York University. He is survived by his wife Margaret, and three children, John, Laurel, and Janet of Reston, VA; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Hope II, of Washington, DC; a brother, Dr. Richard O. Hope of Indianapolis, IN; and a sister, Mrs. Linda Hope Lee, of Dallas, TX. We share in their sorrow and are comforted by the fact that we are fortunate indeed to have known John Hope III.●

DAN MARRIOTT

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 19, 1984

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in this special order to honor our fellow colleague, DAN MARRIOTT of Utah, as he nears the end of his service in Congress after four consecutive terms.

It has been an honor to serve in this house with DAN MARRIOTT and I have especially enjoyed our work together on the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families. As ranking minority member of this select committee first established in 1983, DAN has filled that position with distinction. He is deeply committed to promoting the importance of the family in our society and his committee work has reflected that concern. He also has been the chief sponsor for 8 years of "National Family Week" during Thanksgiving Week each year.

DAN MARRIOTT has been a leader and champion not only for family and children causes, but has also been a consistent supporter of responsible Federal spending. He will also leave a list of significant accomplishments from his tireless efforts on the Small Business Committee where he has worked to safeguard the interests of small business in our Nation and from his position of leadership for the minority on the Interior Committee where he has been an effective legislator in formulating responsible, bipartisan environmental policies and where he was a leader in developing and securing passage of the Utah Wilderness bill.

I salute DAN MARRIOTT as a man of principle and integrity who has served the people of this Nation and the people of the Second District of Utah effectively and admirably since 1976. He has been a valued colleague and an outstanding public servant and I wish him continued success in his future endeavors.●

DAVID A. SWEDLOW: CELEBRATING 50 YEARS IN BUSINESS

HON. JERRY M. PATTERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to David A. Swedlow, chairman of a Garden Grove based firm, Swedlow, Inc., as he celebrated his 50th anniversary in business. Mr. Swedlow's remarkable career has spanned the history of the modern aviation industry from pre-World War II aircraft to NASA's Skylab, and his valuable contributions to business, industry and the community should be recognized.

David Swedlow has been a pioneering force in the innovative uses of acrylic in the aircraft industry. Entering business in 1934, he was one of the first to envision the application of acrylic outside of commercial products such as art objects and home furnishings. In 1940 his art designs were featured in the New York Metropolitan Museum of Modern Art's display of contemporary American industrial art.

Since that time, Swedlow, Inc. has become a leading manufacturer and provided a half century of creative work of proprietary acrylic and armor products utilized for a wide variety of military and commercial applications. The global upheavals of World War II brought changes in the aircraft industry and further involved David Swedlow in the industry. Planes requiring special fabrication and sealant techniques for acrylics were assembled and Swedlow's innovativeness once again responded to the call. Throughout the years Swedlow responded to the challenges to develop the transparencies required for aircraft.

With commercial aviation coming of age after the war, Swedlow acrylics continued to excell. Swedlow invested the company's resources and talent and earned the reputation and respect of a man who could accomplish the job. His importance in the industry was demonstrated by his products being used on nearly all major U.S. planes. Swedlow was involved in the early development of both the B-1 bomber and Skylab, solving design and fabrication challenges for acrylic windows.

In 1982 the U.S. Department of Defense presented Swedlow, Inc. with its prestigious Contractors Assessment Program Award for an exceptional record of developing quality products for the Nation's defense.

Swedlow, Inc. has been active in the community as a contributor and supporter of Children's Hospital of Orange County. Employing over 600 individuals in Orange County, Swedlow, Inc. has established itself as a valuable asset to our community, our Nation's defense, as well as maintaining the forefront of the industry. David Swedlow's commitment to advancing the state of the art through research and development will keep Swedlow, Inc. a leader in their specialized technology.●

HON. FRANK HARRISON

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, October 30, the community college in Luzerne County, PA, will receive national recognition from the U.S. Department of Education for the excellence of its Vocational Support Program for Displaced Homemakers in Luzerne and Lackawanna counties.

The Luzerne County Community College will, on that date, receive the Secretary's Award for Outstanding Vocational Education Programs, 1 of 10 such awards to be given in the Nation.

Criteria for the selection of award recipients include "hands-on" experience in shops or at worksites, cooperation with business, industry, and labor; and job placement rates.

Mr. Speaker, I know that all the Members of this body will join with me in congratulating the students, faculty, and administration of the Luzerne County Community College, in particular its president, Mr. Thomas Moran, and the director of the LCCC Displaced Homemaker Program, Ms. Maureen Ambrose, for achieving this national distinction.●

CELEBRATING MINORITY ENTERPRISE WEEK

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO

OF NEW YORK

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, what's good for minority business is good for America. Minority-owned businesses are opening up new opportunities and infusing the U.S. economy with new lifeblood. These successful entrepreneurs have overcome many hurdles and truly paint the picture of the American self-made success stories.

Over the years, I have had the pleasure of working with many minority-owned businesses. The satisfaction I receive through their success is unparalleled. I know that the future of our country lies in their growth. For in America, we are constantly working to insure that every man is given the equal opportunity to succeed. For too long, minority businesses have been shortchanged. The growing success of many of these companies is an indication that we are on the way to overcoming the economic and racial barriers that have historically impeded the development of the minority business community.

There are over 600,000 minority businesses in America today. More than 60,000 of these businesses are awarded Government contracts. In my own district of southeast Queens, I have worked with men such as Lawrence Cormier, president of Technology Industries Corp. Larry just opened the first minority-owned defense plant which, in 2 years, promises to employ more than 300 people. I have seen the labors of Nat Singleton, the executive director of the Association of Minority Enterprises of New York. Nat's boundless energies have created hundreds of opportunities for minority businesses throughout the State of New York. I have seen Jim Heyliger build his business, Southeast Queens General Contracting Inc., into an important force in the community.

In my home State of New York, we believe that the achievements made by minority businesses warrant 2 weeks of recognition. You see, our State has declared the week of October 3-7, Minority Business Week. The President has issued a proclamation that October 7-13 is Minority Enterprise Development Week,

As a ranking member of the Small Business Committee, I intend to continue to press the administration into recognizing the needs of minority businesses. They must enforce small business set-aside laws. We have worked too hard to sit idle and let our gains be reversed. Proclamations make great press releases, but for the past 4 years, this administration has provided the minimum level of support for major programs intended to assist minority businesses in achieving competitive viability. It is not press releases that get the work done. It is action.

I intend to press this administration to enforce the letter and the spirit of the law. If the spirit of this proclamation truly represents a change in their direction, then I ask for their fullest cooperation in providing funds for small and minority business startups. Actions speak louder than words.

The development of minority business is critical to the well-being of our Nation. Today, as we celebrate Minority Enterprise Week, we reaffirm our commitment to helping all minority-owned businesses reach their American dream—full economic parity.●

COMMEMORATION OF WILLIAM HERMAN BEAVER

HON. FOFO I.F. SUNIA

OF AMERICAN SAMOA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. SUNIA. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect and also with sadness that I rise to commemorate the memory of one of the greatest entrepreneurs to rise to success in the territory of American Samoa who passed away last week. His name is William Herman Beaver and our territory has lost the experience and aptitude of a great business leader.

Mr. Beaver cofounded the South Pacific Traders, the first modern style department store, with his father-in-law, the late H.C. Soli'ai Penemua, in 1961. He skillfully developed a market for a clothing specialty store in Fagatogo and expanded to the biggest department store on our island today in the village of Nu'uuli.

He was born in Rockwell, NC, on April 8, 1913. After serving in the U.S. Navy, he worked for several years for the Kodak Co. in Hawaii, after which he went to Guam to serve as general manager of Town House, the largest department store in Agana. He left Guam in 1960 to open a clothing store in Honolulu. The following year, he founded the South Pacific Traders in Fagatogo, which for years has been the most popular clothing store on our island.

Through all the hard work and perserverance of owning and operating a business, Mr. Beaver found the time to dedicate to community service organizations such as the Rotary Club, the chamber of commerce, and the cancer fund. He was also a bishop in the Church of the Latter-day Saints. His hard work and dedication serves as a fine example to be long remembered.

He is survived by his wife, Lefagaoalii Soli'ai, a daughter, grandchildren, and brothers who reside in North Carolina.●

NEW TEXTILE RULES THREATEN EXPORTS

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, recent changes in Customs regulations affecting rules of origin for textile and apparel imports have raised grave concerns within our trading community. These concerns have been especially pronounced among America's farmers. As a Representative from the State of Washington, where agricultural exports are so important to the region's economic health, I view these rule changes with great alarm. It is for this reason that I am introducing today a resolution calling for a 6-month delay in the implementation of the new rules of origin. I am pleased to note that every member of the Washington and Oregon delegations has joined me as a cosponsor of this resolution.

Public threats of retaliation in response to the August 3 action by Customs have already been issued by a number of important U.S. trading partners, most notably Hong Kong and the People's Republic of China. The new regulations have been openly criticized by all of the world's major industrialized nations. The textile committee of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade has found the new rules to be in violation of the multifiber arrangement and has urged the United States to revoke or postpone their implementation.

Of equal importance is the haste with which Customs issued these rule changes. Importers have roundly condemned Customs for not allowing sufficient time for comment. The possible effect these regulatory changes might have on other American industries and consumers was not thoroughly considered.

The way these new rules have been applied is just another example of how the Reagan administration has tried to have it both ways on trade. While Ronald Reagan tells the American people that he is in favor of free trade, his administration has quietly restricted imports across a wide spectrum of industries and products.

U.S. exports are finally beginning to increase after 2 devastating years of decline. These new rule changes threaten to bring this budding expansion to a screeching halt. Should the Customs Service ignore this resolution and press ahead with their rule changes, I will not hesitate to develop and introduce legislation that will force the new regulations to be revoked.

While I would prefer to see Customs rescind its new rules entirely, I am only proposing to delay implementation of the regulations for at least 6 months. This delay will allow all interested parties enough time to make their views known. It will also afford the administration and Congress an opportunity to study the potential economic and political implications of the new country of origin rules.

It is my hope that this resolution will win the broad support of the House as a means of continuing the current expansion of U.S. exports.●

ROSH HASHANAH

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to wish my Jewish colleagues a happy New Year. Unfortunately, for those Jews living in the Soviet Union who have been unable to leave, wishing is not enough. More must be done to help these people to have a happy New Year. We must not only wish but also work for their health, welfare and rights as Rosh Hashanah marks the beginning of the year 5745.

I would like to welcome Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko to the United States. I would also like to give him a message: We have not forgotten the Jewish citizens of his nation. Their struggle will not end, nor will our efforts on their behalf, until the Jews of the Soviet Union are accorded the basic human rights to which all citizens of the world are entitled.

It is significant that President Reagan and Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko have chosen to meet on the Jewish New Year. Mr. Gromyko's presence here indicates a willingness to discuss issues and to resolve differences that has been sadly lacking on the part of both superpowers for several years. Let us hope that their meeting will open a new phase in United States-Soviet relations, and for the Jews of the Soviet Union, a truly happy New Year.●

VINCENT DOWLING

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, for the last nine seasons, the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival has had the benefit of the considerable skill and talent of Vincent Dowling. Now, Vincent is leaving America's north coast where he has served as the festival's producing director. He leaves to take on new responsibilities as the producing and artistic director of the PCPA Theatrefest in San Maria, CA.

Born in Dublin, Vincent is a naturalized citizen of the United States. He has staged productions of the classics throughout England, Scotland, Wales as well as in his native land. In fact, he holds the title of lifetime associate director in Dublin's famed Abbey Theatre. As a leading actor and director, his association with the Abbey lasted for over 20 years. In this country, he has directed several major resident theaters, including Trinity Square, Indiana Repertory, Meadow Brook, and Missouri Repertory.

Vincent's talents include a gift for adaptation. His works include an acting version of Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard," an adaptation of Aristophanes' "Lysistrata," and a musical based on George Bernard Shaw's "The Shewing-Up of Blanco Posnet."

Vincent has performed at the White House three times in the last 4 years, performing excerpts from "My Lady Luck," a one-man show by James A. Brown, based on the life and works of poet Robert Service. He has taken the show on the road to Florida and New York.

As he leaves his many friends and supporters in the Greater Cleveland area, we wish him well.

His contribution to the cultural vitality of northeast Ohio has been tremendous. We appreciate the work he has done and hope for his regular return to the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to record my vote on the Roe amendment to the continuing appropriations, fiscal year 1985 (H.J. Res. 648) because I was in conference on the Resource Conservation Recovery Act [RCRA] H.R. 2867. Had I been present, I would have voted in favor of the Roe amendment.●

SALUTE TO THE NATIONAL PROPERTY MANAGEMENT ASSOCIATION

HON. JERRY M. PATTERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, this week the National Property Management Association is holding its annual seminar in Buena Park, CA. I would like my colleagues to join me in saluting the important contributions made by property managers to our national economy and to the efficient operation of government.

NPMA is a nonprofit organization composed of members from all sections of the country who are responsible for the management of fixed and movable assets as applies to Government contracts and company capital and expense property. The professionals in this important business contribute to out Nation's industrial strength through their efficient management of all types of assets required to make businesses function. In addition, they contribute to strengthening the Nation's defense by carefully managing 37 billion dollars' worth of Defense Department property which is in the hands of contractors and is used to manufacture defense products.

NPMA has a membership of 1,100 in 27 chapters throughout the country. Members are from both the Government sector and private industry, and include some of the Nation's largest aerospace corporations as well as many small companies. NPMA membership includes only a small segment of the individuals involved in property management throughout the country.

The purpose of the National Property Management Association is to provide a continuing forum for discussion, problem solving, standardized application of Government regulations, and design and implementation of effective, efficient property systems. The association provides educational methods, programs, materials, and opportunities which will enable members to learn and apply the principles and techniques of effective personal property and facilities management and related subjects.

At this week's seminar, the association is honored to have as its keynote speaker Ms. Mary Ann Gilleece, Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering (Acquisition Management). Ms. Gilleece chairs the Defense Government Property Council, which was created in the spring of 1983 to coordinate the development and approval of effective policies for the management of Government property used by defense contractors or defense industrial facilities for research, development, test, evaluation, production, and maintenance.

Mr. Speaker, with the current emphasis on improving Government efficiency and eliminating wasteful practices, I am pleased that NPMA is available to help educate professional property managers about the latest techniques in this field. I salute this fine organization as it continues its outstanding record of service to property management practitioners.●

THERON OTHEL (SHORTY) FREEMAN

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, Theron Othel (Shorty) Freeman, a constituent whom I admired for many years, died September 9 at his home near Symsonia, KY, at the age of 67.

A native of Graves County, KY, Mr. Freeman was a retired employee of the parts department of the Kentucky Bureau of Highways. He was a member of Doom's Chapel Holiness Church.

Mr. Freeman was born handicapped. He was short in size. He was nicknamed "Shorty" at an early age.

"Shorty" Freeman accepted life with what God provided him. He never complained, never sought Government assistance or relief. One admirer said of him: "He fought his own way in life."

"Shorty" Freeman loved Kentucky politics and was always the unannounced campaign manager for his brother, Mayfield attorney Wayne W. Freeman, who won several campaigns for State representative, State senator, and first district railroad commissioner in western Kentucky.

Mr. Freeman is survived by his wife, Mrs. Linda Freeman; two sons, Bobby Freeman of Symsonia and Ronnie Freeman of Mayfield; two brothers, Wayne Freeman of Mayfield, and Noble Freeman of Paducah; a sister, Mrs. Maebelle Bowers of Seattle; two grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

I extend my deepest sympathy to the Freeman family.●

TRIBUTE TO MR. AND MRS. RALPH ELSTON

HON. FRANK HARRISON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on September 8, 1984, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Elston of Kunkle, PA, observed their 69th wedding anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Elston were married on September 8, 1915, in the Lutheran Methodist Church by Rev. H.M. Kelly. Mrs. Elston is the former Agnes Isaacs, daughter of the last John and Estella Kunkle Isaacs of Kunkle, PA. Mr. Elston is the son of the late Martin K. and Lana Hoyt Elston, also of Kunkle.

Prior to retirement, Mr. Elston was engaged in a career in farming.

The Elstons are the proud parents of six children, 21 grandchildren and 32 great-grandchildren. They are members of the Kunkle United Methodist Church, where Mrs. Elston is a charter member of the United Methodist Women.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure in saluting this fine couple on the occasion of their 69th wedding anniversary.●

COMMEMORATING THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE GRACE PARK ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, next month the Grace Park Elementary School in Swarthmore, PA, will be celebrating its 30th anniversary. I rise to note this event because Grace Park Elementary School is a very special educational institution.

Grace Park has accepted the challenges of our rapidly changing society by introducing skills programs in computer literacy and communications technology. The school will soon have a television studio as a result of an extensive community fundraising effort. Among other uses, educators at Grace Park plan to employ this facility to film the children as they progress through each grade. Their goal is the production of a living yearbook for each child.

This outstanding elementary school has not forgotten to balance these forward-looking programs with the traditional emphasis on basic skills and strong character development. The value and necessity of such training has been extensively documented and commented on in recent well-publicized reports on the state of American education. It is very important that our elementary schools keep to the pattern set by Grace Park. If our children do not become proficient in reading, writing, mathematics, and other basic skills, our communities and our Nation will lose the vigor engendered by a well-educated population.

This elementary school has also shown great enthusiasm for community projects. Last year, many of Grace Park's students participated in the "Jump Rope for Heart," learning good citizenship and raising over $2,000 for the American Heart Association in the process. Moreover, the children in the primary grades earned $800 during a multiple sclerosis readathon. Those efforts were very notable achievements for a school with a student body of 175.

I would like to take this opportunity to extend my own best wishes and congratulations on this important anniversary to Grace Park Elementary School Principal Joseph Fleischut, to the schools' faculty, staff, students past and present, to the superintendent of the Ridley School District Dr. Herbert Pless and to Mr. W. Gordon Atherholt, the president of school directors.●

HONORING THE SISTERS OF CHARITY OF SAINT ELIZABETH OF NEW JERSEY

HON. JOSEPH G. MINISH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise with great pleasure today to mark an important anniversary which will be coming up at the end of this week. The New Jersey Sisters of Charity of Saint Elizabeth will celebrate their 125th anniversary this Saturday, September 29.

The Sisters of Charity of Saint Elizabeth are a religious order of women with locations in 20 States in the United States, as well as the Virgin Islands, Bolivia, and Chile. I am fortunate to have one of their main locations in my congressional district in Convent Station, NJ. The New Jersey chapter is part of a group of six communities of Sisters of Charity who were founded in 1809 by Saint Elizabeth Ann Seton, in Emmitsburg, MD.

Throughout the past 125 years, the Sisters of Charity of Saint Elizabeth have been devoted patrons of people of all religions. Serving both spiritual and worldly needs, the sisters volunteer their talents and energies for many worthwhile causes.

Originally, the Sisters of Charity primarily offered assistance in the areas of education and health care. Mindful however, of the changing forces in society, the sisters have continued their dedicated service to others through a variety of programs and issues. Some of the areas in which they are involved today are: Health care for migrant workers, counseling for unwed mothers, the emotionally disturbed, and those dependent on alcohol or drugs, and advocacy for the poor and homeless, among other projects.

The Sisters of Charity of Saint Elizabeth total over 1,000 members. They operate five hospitals in three States, as well as many elementary and secondary schools. The sisters are also the life blood behind the College of Saint Elizabeth, in Convent Station, where they fill administrative and professorial positions. Another note to be proud of is that the College of Saint Elizabeth is the oldest 4 year women's colleges in New Jersey and one of the first Catholic colleges for women in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the women of the Sisters of Charity community have a great deal to be proud of and I am very pleased to send them my warmest wishes for another 125 years of outstanding service.●

DR. DRUE GUY HONORED

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, as part of the Congressional Black Caucus Education Braintrust Weekend which begins on Thursday, September 27, a luncheon will be held to honor outstanding black women in education. The luncheon will pay tribute to Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the National Education Association, and black women school superintendents from around the country.

One of the honorees at this very special event will be Drue S. Guy, superintendent of schools in East Orange, NJ. Before coming to our community in 1983, Dr. Guy had an extensive and impressive career in both education and social policy in Ohio and Wisconsin. She has made major contributions to both of these fields, and has lectured and written a great deal, particularly about the role of women in education. Throughout her career, she has continually searched for the solutions to the very complex and difficult problems we face concerning the future education. We are very fortunate to have someone of her capabilities and compassion in East Orange.

Mr. Speaker, there are few areas that deserve our concern and attention so much as education. The decisions we make now about our children's education are crucial. It is therefore extremely important that the Braintrust Network Association is working on a national basis to improve equity and excellence in education. I salute the association, and particularly our colleague from New York, Congressman MAJOR OWENS, for his leadership role in this endeavor. In addition, I offer my sincere congratulations to Dr. Drue Guy and the other outstanding honorees.●

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the 12th item on the suspension calendar was H.R. 6163, the Federal District Court Organization Act of 1984. Unfortunately, I was not here to speak in support of the measure since among the specifics with which it deals, is a court in my district. I was in my district yesterday conducting hearings on the 1985 farm bill with particular reference to peanuts.

This bill will be of tremendous benefit to the south Texas Rio Grande Valley. Essentially what the legislation will do is create a more orderly judicial process in my area by establishing at McAllen a new division of the U.S. Southern District Court of Texas. This division would exclusively serve the judicial needs of Hidalgo and Starr Counties. As a result of this reorganization, there will be significant financial savings realized—savings approximated at this time to be about $431,000.

The greatest advantages of this legislation, however, are the subjective considerations dealing with manhour savings in the transportation of prisoners, improving the quality of justice and representation by minimizing travel for attorneys, jurors, litigants, witnesses, and clients. Other subjective factors include the improvement of relationships between enforcement agencies and local commissioners' courts which will, I am certain, result in improved jail facilities and general working relationships between Federal, State, and local officers.

Economy, security and caseload reduction are the key factors here—and these are what the Lower Rio Grande Valley is going to realize as a result of this legislation along with the improved administration of justice at the grassroots level. I thank the House for acting affirmatively and I urge the Senate to do likewise.●

TRIBUTE TO SOL AND LILLAN BRENNER

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Sol and Lillian Brenner, from Lauderdale Lakes, FL, who recently celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary. This couple's achievements are many. Their community involvement throughout the years has sustained their marriage. For Sol and Lillian, family was always important, but they managed to always find some time to donate to an important group, cause, or activity.

Sol founded the Senior Adult Club of the Jewish Community Center (JCC) at University Boulevard. The JCC is primarily a social activity for the community at large. At the height of the JCC activity, there were 1,100 people in the membership. He served as president from inception of the club 7 years ago and now is serving on the board.

Other activities include founding the Somerset B'nai B'rith chapter and lodge where Sol served as president. This is the largest B'nai B'rith unit in south Florida. He also serves on the board of the B'nai B'rith Levi Arthritic Hospital in Hot Springs, AR. Both Lillian and Sol are fundraisers for United Jewish Appeal and Israel Bond drives. They are active public speakers on arthritis and Yiddish storytelling. Both teach dance at the JCC and their condo complex.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in paying tribute to the Brenners who have contributed tremendously to their community. They have enriched so many lives by creating centers where people can congregate and socialize. Sol and Lillian Brenner are an excellent example of what hard work and commitment can accomplish.●

AL LARSON DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, September 26, Orange County, NY, will be celebrating "Al Larson Day."

Tomorrow is Al's 34th anniversary as a newscaster on radio station WALL, radio 1340 on our dial.

When Al first began broadcasting the news to Orange County, Harry Truman was in the White House, Korea and Vietnam were exotic names on the map that not many of us had heard of, and a four-bedroom house in our area could be had, with 4 percent GI mortgage, for less than $10,000.

Now, 34 years and seven Presidents later, we celebrate Al Larson's becoming a fixture in Orange County. For 34 years, he exulted with us over the good news, and commiserated with us over the bad.

Al Larson has helped our region through the growing pains, and in the process, has become as much of an Orange County institution as the Goshen Historic Track and our beautiful Hudson Valley.

On this happy occasion, I ask my colleagues to join with us in saluting a great newsman, Al Larson.●

REMEMBER MART NIKLUS

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on September 22, 1984, Mart Niklus—Estonian human rights activist and Helsinki monitor—turned 50. But there were no cakes, or music, or family celebrations to mark the occasion. September 22 was a day much like any other day for Mart—24 hours alone, in solitary confinement in the Soviet Union's infamous Christopol prison.

Mart, a man who has never shrunk from the task of defending human rights against Soviet state repression, is no stranger to jail. He was first imprisoned in 1958 and sentenced to 10 years of hard labor followed by 3 years of internal exile for sending photographs depicting conditions in Soviet-occupied Estonia to a Western journalist. From 1975-79, he was repeatedly imprisoned and harassed, and in 1980 he was refused permission to leave Estonia and live with relatives in Sweden. Subsequently, on March 19, 1980, Niklus was again imprisoned for disobeying a government official. Today, he is in the midst of another hunger strike in the Christopol prison. His mother fears that he won't survive.

Mart Niklus is a man of deep conviction, a man willing to withstand injustice so that his principles may survive. He is a shining example for all people who care about human rights, and a hero to the Estonian people. I join with all Estonians, and defenders of human rights everywhere, in demanding his immediate release from the Christopol prison.●

MR. REAGAN'S SPEECH TO THE UNITED NATIONS

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, last night the President of the United States addressed the 39th session of the United Nations General Assembly. His overture to the Soviet Foreign Ambassador, Andrei Gromyko, was so overwhelmingly peaceful I am compelled to take him up on his word.

In the next few weeks, I must work closely with the administration and my colleagues on the other side of the Chamber to come up with a defense budget that is strong but sound. We must reduce waste and eliminate wasteful weapons systems.

Last night, the President opened his speech by noting "America has repaired its strength." Indeed, I agree with him. Midway through his speech he noted "Any agreement must logically depend upon our ability to get the competition in offensive arms under control and to achieve genuine stability at substantially lower levels of nuclear arms."

The President's words were very wise. His genuine sincerity prompts me to request that he reevaluate one of the most dangerous and destabilizing strategic weapons in this year's budget—the MX missile. In fact, the MX will only threaten the peace that the President seeks to establish. Our ability to scrap the MX missile would clearly demonstrate that we are willing to substantially lower the level of nuclear arms and achieve stability.

My proposal would not be seen as the United States backing down to the Soviet Union. As the President said "We have it in our power to begin the world over again." My proposal is to move toward beginning it without nuclear weapons.●

NEW JERSEY'S COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM MARK 20TH YEAR

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 20th anniversary of the passage of the Economic Opportunity Act. When that historic legislation was signed into law, it heralded new hope for millions of Americans. That bold endeavor proved that America's greatness lies in our ability to care for all of our people.

The Community Action Programs that were spawned by that act have weathered countless trials and tribulations. In the past two decades the CAP's have matured and grown and have never given up their challenge to make our country a better place for all our citizens.

On October 13, the Community Action Program Executive Directors Association of New Jersey will mark this landmark year with an anniversary dinner dance in Newark. Twenty years of community action will be celebrated by those who have devoted their time and energy to improving the quality of life of disadvantaged people in New Jersey.

It has been my privilege to have been associated with the Community Action Programs of New Jersey. I salute those who have worked so hard to accomplish their goals, particularly Joseph Gaynor, president of CAPEDA of New Jersey and Carol Grant, the executive director. In addition, I would like to pay tribute to Catherine Willis, gala committee chairperson; and committee members Greg Adkins, Lillian Allen, Ellen Conaway, Claudia Grant, Patricia Hunt, Helen Johnson, Carolyn McKinney, and Deborah Smith.●

MILLIE THE CHISELER

HON. DONALD JOSEPH ALBOSTA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring your attention to the contributions one of my constituents has made and is continuing to make to the art world. Known to her many admirers as "Millie the Chiseler," Ms. Millie Miller has wielded her carving knife to recreate a part of Michigan's history for both native and tourist to enjoy.

Millie Miller has earned State, national, and international renown for her marvelous artwork. Few people are so gifted with chisel, patience, and vision to form the designs which bring great pleasure and pride to the people who are fortunate enough to see them.

Millie Miller's artwork includes her impression of Chief Ogemaw which serves as the official insignia of Ogemaw County, her design of the official coat of arms of the city of West Branch, her carving of President Ford—which is on display at the Gerald R. Ford Museum in Grand Rapids—as well as, many famous totem poles. Her artistry has brought joy to countless people and honored many of Michigan's most well-known citizens. She is a credit to Michigan, the Midwest, and our Nation. We should all applaud her unending efforts to create beauty throughout the country. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have Ms. Miller as one of my constituents.●

HONORING HOSEA LEE EDWARDS

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 1984

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to honor Hosea Lee Edwards, long a friend of the law and valuable member of both his professional and civil community, who is now retiring after 60 years as one of Texas' finest lawyers.

The late Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote: "We learn to behave as lawyers, soldiers, merchants, or whatnot by being them. Life, not the parson, teaches conduct. H.L. Edwards achieved his respected position through the dedicated efforts of a lifetime. He strove to be the best in his years as a lawyer, and is recognized as such by his peers. Others who aspire to a legal career can only benefit from looking to his example of hard work and high ideals.

He has served as both city and county attorney in his lifelong home, Nacogdoches, TX, as well as special district judge. His knowledge and talents have benefited both local businesses and individuals. He has distinguished himself as one of the great criminal lawyers of his time. As its senior member, he has been honored by the Nacogdoches County Bar Association. He is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

It is with hope for a pleasurable retirement, and some regret at the loss of his active participation in the legal field, that I ask you to join me in congratulating His Honor, H.L. Edwards, on a remarkable career and wishing him every happiness in the years to come.●

(Legislative day of Monday, September 24, 1984)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, on the eve of Rosh Hashanah, we celebrate the incalculable contribution Jews have made to history. We thank You for the light which this extraordinary people has shed upon the whole world—a light the darkness could not extinguish despite relentless efforts, generation after generation, century after century.

Four thousand years ago, Lord, You promised Your servant Abraham that through his descendants all the families of the Earth would be blessed. Thank You for the fulfillment of that promise in their profound contribution to motherhood, family, music, art, drama, entertainment, literature, education, science, medicine, law, merchandizing and marketing, banking and finance. Thank You, Lord, for the immeasurable gift of Jews to history, despite incredible persecution, oppression, and suffering. Bless the Lord for His great people. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished acting majority leader is recognized.

ROSH HASHANAH

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, we do thank the Chaplain for his words of encouragement in the opening prayer relating to Rosh Hashanah. Some of the most poignant memories I have of my childhood are the days that I spent in the homes of some of my Jewish companions, particularly on their holidays. I cannot remember anything as a youngster that impressed me as much as the devotion of those families to their religion and to the perpetuation of their traditions through observance of their religious holidays.

So it is with recognition of that tradition and dedication that the Senate will not conduct rollcall votes after 6 p.m. this evening or before 6 p.m. Thursday. We may and probably will have debate after 6 p.m. tonight and during the day on Thursday. But no rollcall votes will occur between 6 p.m today and 6 p.m tomorrow. We will attempt to see if we can get an agreement on stacking of votes should they be ordered, so that Senators should be on notice that in all probability there will be rollcall votes that will occur immediately after 6 p.m. tomorrow evening.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today we have special orders for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] and then a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 12 noon. At 12 noon, we will turn to the consideration of the Interior appropriations bill. It has been ordered. It is our hope that today or early tomorrow the Senate will take up the conference report which accompanies the first concurrent budget resolution and the conference report which accompanies the defense authorization bill for 1985. The continuing resolution for 1985 has been reported and will be before the Senate tomorrow we hope, Friday at the latest.

The majority leader has asked me to announce that Senators should be on notice that there will be a late session on Thursday. A cloture motion has been filed with respect to the highway bill. That cloture motion will mature on Thursday and a vote will occur on that motion. The Senate will be in session on Friday. It now appears that that may well be late. It depends upon the progress that will be made on the continuing resolution. There is also a high probability the Senate will be in session on Saturday. The fiscal year for 1984 expires on Sunday, September 30, at midnight, and we are hopeful we will complete our work on the continuing resolution and have it to the President before that time.

It is not possible to predict accurately what will happen next week other than to mention that we will have the debt-limit bill. It is our hope that we will be able to adjourn sine die on October 4. That may carry over to October 5. Many of us have made commitments. I have made a commitment to be 5,000 miles away on Saturday morning so I hope that we do complete our work on the 5th. I very much hope that I am in Valdez, a beautiful place with Alaskan fjords and a place I would much rather be on Saturday morning, October 6, than trying to wind down a session of the Senate.

I reserve the remainder of our time. I yield to my good friend, the minority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, in order to preserve our time situation, I ask unanimous consent there be a period during which we may conduct routine morning business not to extend beyond 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL COOPERATIVE RESEARCH ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 1841 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1841) to promote research and development, encourage innovation, stimulate trade, and make necessary and appropriate amendments to the antitrust patent, and copyright laws, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of September 21, 1984.)

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report to S. 1841, the "National Cooperative Research Act of 1984." This legislation will help keep America in the forefront of technological innovation by encouraging much needed research and development. S. 1841 clarifies the application of the antitrust laws to joint research and development ventures, thus reducing the risk of such ventures and producing incentives for companies to join together and undertake the complex research projects which are necessary if we are to maintain our competitive edge in the world marketplace. Currently, many procompetitive joint research and development ventures never come about because of the risk of antitrust challenge, and society suffers accordingly because of inefficiency and duplication of effort.

Mr. President, the conference report is a sound compromise between the Senate and House versions of this legislation. The conferees worked long and hard to achieve what I believe is an excellent result. The statement of the managers outlines in great detail exactly what the conferees did and why, and I would, therefore, request unanimous consent that both the conference report and the statement of the managers be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. President, this conference agreement was possible because of the hard work and outstanding dedication to the public interest demonstrated by the conferees and staff. As chairman of the conference, I highly commend them all. I would note, however, that this legislation was the subject of great effort over the past several years by the entire Committee on the Judiciary, and I would be remiss if I did not give my thanks to every member of the committee.

Mr. President, I would particularly like to thank the Senate conferees. Senators MATHIAS, HATCH, DOLE, BIDEN, METZENBAUM, and LEAHY all did an outstanding job and, as always, were a pleasure to work with. Without question, this legislation would not have been possible without a strong bipartisan effort.

Mr. President, I would also like to give my sincere thanks to the conference staff. Their dedication and hard work certainly made the conference go smoothly and I am grateful for their tremendous efforts. Those staff instrumental to the conference included Tom Olson (Senator MATHIAS), Renn Patch (Senator HATCH), Sheila Bair (Senator DOLE), Bill Ichord (Senator BIDEN), Steve Ross (Senator METZENBAUM), John Podesta and Ben Scotch (Senator LEAHY), and my counsel, Steve Cannon.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I am satisfied that we have worked diligently and now lay before the Senate legislation that is truly in the public interest. I believe that this country will reap the benefits of S. 1841 for many years to come.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, last week the House and Senate conferees on the joint research and development bill, S. 1841, met and approved a compromise draft of that legislation. This bill is the product of long labors in both Houses of the Congress, and represents a synthesis of a number of bills on this subject, including my own bill, S. 737. I am pleased that we have been able to finish our deliberations on this vital legislation in time to ensure its passage during this Congress.

Scientific and technical research is critical to our future economic competitiveness. As a nation, we carry out this research in many ways. For example, our great universities—of which Maryland boasts some of the finest—play a key role in helping to expand our common fund of scientific knowledge. But the research and development efforts of private industry are equally critical.

Today, American businesses are hesitant to take advantage of a promising approach to scientific research: cooperative efforts among different companies that share the same research objectives. Joint projects of this kind can greatly reduce overhead costs, and can eliminate wasteful duplication of effort. Yet few such efforts exist today, in part because of concern about possible antitrust problems.

As S. 1841 was approved by the Senate, it directly addressed that antitrust concern. The Senate bill made clear that joint R&D programs are not to be condemned per se, but are to be judged under a flexible "rule of reason" analysis. The committee report on that bill, Senate Report 98-427, offered detailed guidance about applying the antitrust laws to joint R&D ventures. The Senate bill also provided that if a joint R&D program is found to have violated the antitrust laws, it will be liable only for the actual damages caused to the plaintiff, rather than for the treble damages ordinarily awarded under the antitrust laws.

The draft approved by the conference committee incorporates these important reforms. Although the language of the "rule of reason" section has been revised slightly to meet the concerns of the House conferees, that section continues to provide critically needed guidance to the courts in their evaluation of the antitrust consequences of joint R&D ventures. Furthermore, the joint explanatory statement incorporates much of the language of the Senate report concerning the application of the rule of reason in joint R&D cases.

The conference report also contains a compromise provision on the issue of attorney's fees, based in part on a suggestion that I advanced during Senate discussions of that issue. This compromise adopts the standard laid out by the Supreme Court in its unanimous decision in Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 417 (1978). In that case, the Court ruled that attorney's fees should be awarded to successful defendants in title VII cases if the suit was "frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation," or was brought in bad faith. The joint explanatory statement on the conference report explains in detail how this provision is to be interpreted, and I will make only a few additional comments on that subject.

First, the courts have recognized that lawsuits are not to be used as "fishing expeditions" to inquire into sensitive information in the possession of the defendant. See, for example, Beard v. Annis, 730 F.2d 741 (11th Cir. 1984); Ryan v. Hatfield, 578 F.2d 275 (10th Cir. 1978). In particular, the courts should make appropriate use of protective orders under rule 26 of the Federal rules of civil procedure to ensure that the fruits of a cooperative research venture are not unfairly disseminating to outsiders through the discovery process.

Second, the courts have recognized that the financial circumstances of a plaintiff may be relevant in determining the size of an award of attorney's fees against the plaintiff. See for example, Faraci v. Hickey-Freeman Co., 607 F.2d 1025 (2d Cir. 1979); Colucci v. New York Times Co., 533 F. Supp. 1011 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). Finally, the courts have noted that a determination of whether a party has "prevailed" in a particular portion of a lawsuit requires a careful analysis based on all the circumstances. In this regard, Justice Brennan's opinion in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 1949-50 (1983), provides sound guidance.

I am confident that enactment of this legislation will help ensure America's continuing world leadership in technology and science. I urge my colleagues to approve the conference report.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this Senator takes great pleasure in supporting the conference report of S. 1841, the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984. This bill will promote the formation of procompetitive joint research and development ventures.

The Senator from Kansas has long supported limited antitrust protection for those companies wishing to pool their resources and share the risks in order to seek important advances in new technology. In June 1983, I introduced S. 1561, the National Joint Research and Development Policy Act of 1983. This bill is similar to the one before the Senate today.

Joint research and development ventures play an important procompetitive function. Research and the development of new ideas into marketable products, services, or technology are expensive and speculative undertakings, the profits of which may not emerge for several years. Joint R&D ventures can, in particular, enable smaller businesses to stay competitive in new or technologically evolving markets, and stimulate productivity growth, enabling the United States to maintain leadership in world trade.

Despite these procompetitive benefits, many businesses, ironically, may be reluctant to engage in joint R&D activities out of fear of an antitrust challenge.

As a general rule, courts have carefully analyzed and weighed the risks and benefits of such ventures in resolving antitrust challenges. Nevertheless, a few earlier cases seem to imply that joint ventures might be viewed as unlawful, per se, under the antitrust laws. Thus, a perception of uncertainty as to the lawfulness of such ventures may still linger.

The conference report is a sound compromise which will provide companies wishing to form joint ventures the degree of certainty they need to justify embarking on a joint R&D venture. I believe that such ventures can play a unique and critical role in this country's continued ability to maintain leadership and competitiveness in the production of new technology. Our antitrust policy should encourage, not retard, this vital activity.

The conference report maintains safeguards against anticompetitive behavior while providing a means for companies to join together in highly expensive and speculative ventures which may lead to the advances necessary for the united States to stay at the top as one of the world's innovators.

As one with a genuine interest in this subject who served on the conference committee, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND, for the leadership he has provided on this bill. Tribute should also be paid to the President, whose own initiatives in this area provided the basic framework for the legislation before the Senate today.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the conference report on S. 1841, the National Cooperative Research Act. The conference reflects a genuine compromise between all concerned parties. I believe that this legislation, which has occupied a great deal of my time as well as the time of many other members of the Judiciary Committee, will remove antitrust obstacles to procompetitive joint ventures without harming the antitrust laws or competition.

Section 2 of the bill provides an accurate and limited definition of joint research and development ventures. This definition protects legitimate projects to keep America at the cutting edge of technology, but will prevent others from trying to misuse this legislation for price fixing or other anticompetitive practices.

Section 3 is, in my view, the heart of the bill. It provides guidance to industry and the courts as to how the antitrust laws should apply to joint R&D ventures. By removing misconceptions about the antitrust law, this section should encourage procompetitive ventures to form, without concern that the antitrust laws will hinder their efforts. At the same time, by spelling out circumstances where ventures might lead to monopolies, we protect consumers from excessive prices for new technology.

Frankly, section 4 of the bill, which eliminates treble damages for some joint R&D ventures, was most troubling to me personally. However, in the context of this compromise on all sides, I am pleased that the statement of the managers makes clear that this legislation will not serve in any way as a precedent for further detrebling.

Section 5 of the bill, relating to attorneys fees for prevailing defendants, reflects a real compromise between my opposition to any change in law and the House position, which called for the routine award of attorneys fees to defendants. As I stated previously, such a provision would have such a chilling effect on private suits that the private attorney general remedy would have been nullified. I could not support such a provision. I am grateful to my good friends, the distinguished chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, PETER RODINO, and Congressman DON EDWARDS, for compromising on this point and limiting defendants awards to situations where the plaintiff's claim or conduct is frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation or in bad faith.

Finally, section 6 of the bill provides for limited public notice of a venture's area of planned activity, to permit affected consumers and purchasers of technology to evaluate the competitive impact of a joint venture. This provision further ensures that this legislation will permit essential joint ventures which increase competition to go forward, while deterring those that could hinder innovation and harm competition.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today the Senate has brought one step closer to passage a bill that will help to harness the inventive imagination of American industry by promoting joint research and development by two or more companies.

I strongly believe we have arrived at legislation that will finally give us the technological cooperation we have long needed, without risking harm to the competitive marketplace or the integrity of our antitrust laws.

When this bill emerged from the Senate Judiciary Committee, I had concerns that I expressed in additional views to the committee report. I felt strongly that the requirement of notification to the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission of the nature and scope of the joint research and development program would act as a serious deterrent to the use of this legislation by industry.

There were two parts to my concern, first the fear that the release of even general information about a proposed project could provide enough information for industry insiders to be able to learn a great deal about the nature and purpose of the venture.

Second, I was concerned about the uncertainty that might be created by the nature of the disclosure statement to the agencies. If it were very detailed, courts, might hold in the future that any project that varied from the details had not been adequately described, and therefore, that the benefits of detrebling would not result.

If the Description were deemed too general, it could be argued that a particular project did not fall within the fair bounds of the notification. I felt that the language of the Senate bill, and especially the legislative history, were unclear as to the legal implications of this dilemma.

I introduced an amendment on the Senate floor to require notification of only the parties to a joint R&D venture, and the amendment was adopted before the bill was finally passed.

There was no comparable amendment in the House bill, which continued to call for notification to the agencies that included the nature, objectives, and duration of a venture.

The resolution of the differences between the bills on the scope of notification was one of the major issues in the conference on this bill, and only after thorough and productive discussions of the goals and the reservations of each side did the proper solution become clear.

The conference adopted the House bill's requirement of stating the nature and objectives of a venture, and eliminated the duration requirement. But the language that described the notification requirements in the joint explanatory statement of the committee of conference is as important as the language in the bill itself, It deals with every problem I raised in my additional views to the Judiciary Committee report:

The joint statement makes it absolutely clear that the degree of detail in the notification is up to the joint venturers providing the notice, with no threatening legal implications from either a short or a very detailed offering.

The joint statement makes it clear that judges should weigh the quality and import of information in a notification on a practical, and not an excessively technical, basis. The dilemma I described in my judiciary additional views should not be a factor in any future litigation. And while no congressional report can ever limit the nature of legal arguments in a future case, claims against a joint venture based on the length or degree of detail in a notification should simply not prevail. Plaintiffs will have to demonstrate that the two agencies were misled by the information in the notification and could not fairly formulate the test of the Federal Register notice. This is a practical, commonsense test, and confidence in that sensible, rather than technical, approach by judges will surely encourage companies to seek the benefits of this legislation.

The joint statement makes it clear that it is notification to the two agencies, not the Federal Register notice, that provides the basis for detrebling, though the notice is required for the protection to vest. The confusion I referred to in my alternative views has been vigorously dispelled by the conference report.

In all of these accomplishments, the beneficiaries are the public, who look to still vigorous antitrust laws to guard the marketplace, and our industries, which can benefit from a joint research and development undertaking, without fear of straying into unforeseen and unavoidable violations of the law.

There were other hard issues for this conference, and on these, fair and productive compromises were the end result of our work. I believe that some substantive guidelines for the court on the rule of reason provision in the bill will prove very useful and will not adversely affect the large body of law regarding the rule of reason generally in antitrust cases.

The attorney's fee issue was resolved with greater and clearer protection against groundless lawsuits than had been provided in the Senate. Should this protection not prove adequate over time, this is an issue the Congress can surely revisit.

I hope and trust that before week's end this bill will be on the President's desk. It will then be up to industry to show the Congress and the American people that it has the will, as well as the legal clearance, to undertake important joint R&D ventures that can benefit the entire country.

This legislation shows that Congress can respond to the pressures generated by technology and international competition. And I believe that the care taken in this bill to preserve the framework and strength of our antitrust laws shows that we can accommodate our important Federal legal protections to the needs of a rapidly changing world.

I know that this will not be the last time we face such a challenge, but the experience that Members and staff have gained working on this historic legislation gives me great hope for our future efforts.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the conferees from the Senate have worked hard with our colleagues in the House to bring S. 1841, the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984, back to both Chambers. As one of the Senate conferees, I believe we have brought back a bill that carefully preserves the substantive provisions of the Senate-passed bill and accomplishes what we set out to do in our original legislation.

The efforts by the conferees to work out the differences in this research and development bill culminate several years of consideration of various bills and countless drafts of legislation. It also brings to a successful conclusion a legislative initiative that enjoyed unanimous support in both houses.

Mr. President, there is one technical change made in section 4 of the conference bill which I believe warrants brief clarification. The conferees have agreed to language in section 4 that says the conduct of a joint research and development venture "within the scope of the notification" filed pursuant to section 6 cannot be the basis of a treble damage award. I think it important to make clear that the conferees did not intend that specific conduct, such as a licensing practice, must be included in the notification. Rather, so long as joint research and development conduct does not fall within the exclusions set out in section 2(b), such conduct cannot form the basis of a treble damage award, whether or not the notification describes it. The sole purpose of the change made by the conference committee was to make clear, for example, that the members of a computer joint research and development venture will not be entitled to the protections of the bill if they decide to change the nature and scope of the venture to chemical research, without providing additional notification pursuant to section 6.

Mr. President, this legislation sets in place a sensible and essential clarification of our antitrust laws in recognition of the powerful and important role that research and development plays in preserving American innovative and competitive abilities in a rapidly changing world economy and in preserving American jobs. In this regard, I believe this bill sends an important signal both to American business and to our worldwide competitors.

To American businesses, the Congress has enunciated a policy of greater flexibility in antitrust enforcement that will significantly reduce the legal risks of joint research and development programs. It tells them in unequivocal terms, that if they contemplate the heavy expense and risk of joint research and development activities, that the antitrust laws will not stand as a barrier of unknown risks to their actions.

In fact, by making it clear that joint research and development ventures fall within the rule of reason standard of antitrust enforcement, and that the rule of reason test should emphasize analysis of the relevant research and development market, we have taken a major step forward in providing for clear legal analysis of any claims brought under the antitrust laws in this area. It is now up to American businesses to take up the challenge of research and development, using this law effectively and responsibly to improve our competitive position in the world.

Mr. President, this bill also sends an important signal to many of our trading partners. It demonstrates to them that the Congress will take positive steps to help American businesses compete on equal footing. In fact, this legislation sets in place a positive and forward looking policy in antitrust enforcement that will help avoid action at the 11th hour to protect our economic foundation.

Mr. President, research and development is the key to America's competitive potential, now and in the future. It is the building block on which American prosperity and stature in the world economy will rest. This legislation should open the door to combined research and development activities that will bring out the best in American industry and in America's ability to be technically creative and innovative.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator from South Carolina have anything further to add?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I thank the able majority leader and the able Democratic leader for their fine cooperation in this matter.

This will probably turn out to be one of the most important pieces of legislation that will be passed in this session. It is an antitrust bill we have been working on for a long time. It took tremendous work to get the various parties together. We have reached an agreement. The conference committee has acted.

It means that corporations now can come together and do research and development without fear of triple damages from the antitrust standpoint.

I am very proud that this legislation can go through. President Reagan is extremely interested in it. I feel that it will do a great deal to advance high technology in the United States.

Again, I thank the leaders for their fine support.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. I assure him that if we on this side can be helpful, we certainly want to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

COMPREHENSIVE SMOKING EDUCATION ACT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1175, H.R. 3979.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3979) to establish a national program to increase the availability of information on the health consequences of smoking, to amend the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act to change the label requirements for cigarettes, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to expeditiously approve H.R. 3979, the Smoking Prevention Health and Education Act. This bill is identical to S. 772 as it was proposed to be amended by a substitute, Hatch printed amendment No. 3082, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 18, 1984.

This final version of the legislation is similar to S. 772 as reported out of the Labor and Human Resources Committee on July 13, 1983, and continues its important mission of educating our citizens about the hazards of smoking.

The bill, as amended, will require four rotating health warning labels on cigarette packages. The warning labels begin with—"Surgeon General's Warning" and are followed by one of four phrases: First, "Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema and May Complicate Pregnancy"; second, "Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health"; third, "Smoking by Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight"; and fourth, "Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide."

The Smoking Prevention Health and Education Act represents a national public education effort designed to improve our citizens awareness about what the Surgeon General has said is the No. 1 preventable cause of death—cigarette smoking. The issue at stake is not whether the Government should tell people how to live their lives. I am not in favor of Government regulations just for the sake of regulating. This does not prevent any citizen from using tobacco products. It will, however, allow them to make a more informed choice.

Mr. President, this momentous day has come about because both the Senate and the House have worked hard for 3 years to make this legislation a reality. I would like to thank the members of the Labor and Human Resources Committee for their strong support of smoking legislation, and for the cooperation of Senator PACKWOOD, the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee. I also want to extend my thanks to my distinguished colleagues in the House of Representatives, Congressman DINGELL, chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, and Congressman WAXMAN, chairman of the Health and Environment Subcommittee for their efforts in bringing about a compromise between the tobacco industry and many national health groups represented by the Coalition on Smoking or Health.

Also, I understand that the following intense negotiations, the tobacco industry has said they will not oppose this bill as passed by the House of Representatives. This has taken great courage on their part and I want to extend my appreciation to the Tobacco Institute and its member companies for their cooperation and willingness to compromise.

This is a bill whose time has come. The American public is asking for more information so they can make a more informed decision on smoking. It is our responsibility to give the American people that information.

Mr. President, in order that the history of this legislation in the Senate be made clear, I ask unanimous consent that the following items be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks:

First. A section-by-section summary of S. 772, as it was proposed to be amended by printed amendment No. 3082 which would make it identical to the House bill now before us;

Second. Excerpts from "Background and Need for Legislation" from the committee report (S. Rept. 98-177) accompanying S. 772;

Third. Excerpts from "Committee Views" from the committee report (S. Rept. 98-177) accompanying S. 772;

Fourth. List of organizations supporting S. 772/H.R. 3979;

Fifth. An article entitled "Basic Facts on Cigarette Smoking" and six attachments to it on the relationship of cigarette smoking and health; and

Sixth. An article from the Washington Post of January 11, 1984 entitled "Twenty Years After the First Warning, Killer Habit Is Still Dying Hard."

Seventh. Excerpts from the House committee report on H.R. 3979, the companion bill to S. 772 in the House of Representatives.

Altogether, the Smoking Prevention Health and Education Act, as amended, represents a national public education effort which is designed to improve our citizens awareness about what the Surgeon General has said is the No. 1 preventable cause of death—cigarette smoking. In conclusion, I urge my colleagues to vote for this necessary and timely legislation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE COMPREHENSIVE SMOKING PREVENTION EDUCATION ACT

SECTION 1: FINDINGS

Findings, attributed to the Surgeon General, concerning: the number of deaths associated with cigarette smoking; the cancers and diseases associated with smoking; the increased risk of pregnancy and birth complications for women who smoke; the effects of quitting or never starting; and the need for greater educational initiatives.

SECTION 2: RESEARCH, EDUCATION AND INFORMATION

Defines the Secretary's duty to conduct and support research; coordinate research and educational programs; analyze and disseminate information on the effects of smoking; and establish an Interagency Committee on Smoking and Health.

SECTION 3: LABELING

Requires that cigarette packages and advertisements bear one of four different warnings in a rotational system. Warnings concern: the diseases and risks associated with smoking; the advantages of quitting; the dangers in smoking by pregnant women; and the inclusion of carbon monoxide in cigarette smoke. Warnings are identical for packages and non-billboard ads, and are slightly shorter for billboards.

Package warning labels are to be placed as they are under present practice, with the preface "Suregon General's Warning" in capital letters. Non billboard advertisement warnings shall appear in rectangles 50% larger than the present rectangles with a corresponding increase in type size and a border twice as wide; warnings may be placed closer to the outer edge of the advertisement, however. Billboard advertisement warnings shall appear in present size and format, but lettering must be entirely in capitals, and the warning must be enclosed by a black border.

All label statements must be conspicious and legible, and must be rotated quarterly in alternating sequence by each manufacturer or importer according to a plan approved by the Federal Trade Commission. Implementation of the new warnings and rotation is not required until one year after enactment.

SECTION 5: CIGARETTE INGREDIENTS

Each manufactuer, packager or distributor must annually provide the Secretary of Health and Human Services with a list of all ingredients added to tobacco in the manufacture of cigarettes. The list need not identify the company or the brand, and may be provided through a third-party intermediary.

When appropriate, the Secretary shall report to Congress on actual and proposed research activities regarding the health effects of these ingredients, information on any ingredient which poses a health risk, or other information in the public interest. All information provided to the Secretary will be treated as trade secret or confidential information under the U.S. Code. The Secretary shall be obligated to provide the lists to Congress upon request by a committee or subcommittee of Congress, but shall also notify the person providing the list of the request.

SECTION 6: MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS

Technical amendments to update references in the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act. The Federal Trade commission's authority with respect to unfair or deceptive practices in the advertising of cigarettes is explicitly left unchanged.

EXCERPTS FROM SENATE REPORT 98-177, ACCOMPANYING S. 772 AS REPORTED BY THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

II. BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Cigarette smoking is clearly the single most important preventable cause of premature illness and death in the United States. Estimates of the number of deaths related to smoking exceed 300,000 annually. One may compare this figure with the 105,000 deaths that occur each year as a result of injuries, 20,000 deaths from homicides, or the 40,000 infant deaths.

This was the testimony of the Assistant Secretary of HHS for Health, Dr. Edward N. Brandt, Jr., before this Committee on March 16, 1982. Dr. Brandt went on to give a capsule description of our current knowledge of the health effects of cigarette smoking:

Cigarette smoking is one of the three major independent risk factors of coronary heart disease and for arteriosclerotic peripheral vascular disease. It is a major cause of cancer of the lung, larynx, oral cavity, and esophagus and a major cause of chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Maternal cigarette smoking is associated with retarded fetal growth, an increased risk for spontaneous abortion and for prenatal death, and slight impairment of growth and development during early childhood.

Cigarette smoking acts synergistically with oral contraceptives to enhance the probability of coronary and some cerebrovascular disease; with alcohol to increase the risk of cancer of the larynx, oral cavity, and esophagus; with asbestos and some other occupationally encountered substances to increase the likelihood of cancer of the lung; and with other risk factors to enhance cardiovascular risk.

This accumulation of knowledge, which amounts to a strong indictment of cigarette smoking as a cause of illness, disability, and death, comes after more than twenty years of Federal activity in the area of smoking and health.

On June 7, 1962, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service appointed an advisory committee to study all published literature bearing on the relationship of smoking to health. After studying the problem for 18 months, the committee submitted a report to the Surgeon General on January 11, 1964. The unanimous judgment of the Surgeon General's Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health was that: "Cigarette smoking is a health hazard of sufficient importance in the United States to warrant remedial action." The report went on to link cigarette smoking specifically with the incidence of and mortality from lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and emphysema, and cardiovascular diseases.

In an effort to take the "appropriate remedial action", the 89th Congress enacted, on July 27, 1965, the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, Public Law 89-92. This legislation required each cigarette package to bear the warning: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health." The 1965 act also required the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and the Federal Trade Commission to submit periodic reports and recommendations to the Congress.

In addition to this legislation enacted in response to the Advisory Committee's report, other actions were taken by the Federal Government and by the private sector to educate the public about the dangers of smoking. The Public Health Service developed programs for the public as well as professionals on smoking education and also established a national clearinghouse on smoking and health information. In addition, State and local health and education authorities and the major voluntary health organizations, launched vigorous smoking education programs.

The next landmark in the history of federal action on smoking and health came in 1969 and 1970 when the 91st Congress considered and passed legislation relating to cigarette labeling and advertising. The Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1970, Public Law 91-222, which was signed into law on April 1, 1970:

(1) Changed the cigarette package label wording to "Warning: The Surgeon General has Determined that Cigarette Smoking is Dangerous to Your Health"; and

(2) Prohibited advertising of cigarettes on radio and television beginning January 2, 1971.

The 1970 act also required annual reports to Congress by the FTC and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare on the health consequences of smoking, effectiveness of labeling and advertising practices.

In August of 1970, the FTC issued a proposed rule to require cigarette manufacturers to disclose tar and nicotine content of cigarettes in their print advertising. The proceeding was suspended in December of the same year when cigarette manufacturers agreed voluntarily to make the disclosures. By December 1971, all cigarette advertisements included tar and nicotine content information.

In the years after the 1970 legislation, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, now the Department of Health and Human Services, continued to collect and evaluate the information and data from research carried out nationally and worldwide on the relationship between smoking and the incidence of various diseases. These research reports and evaluations have been summarized by the Surgeon General in annual reports entitled "The Health Consequences of Smoking," which have made an important contribution to the body of scientific knowledge and synthesize the vast amount of scientific data relating smoking directly to specific diseases.

The fourteenth report of the Surgeon General, published in 1981, came as a direct response to a Congressional request. The Health Services and Centers Amendments of 1978, Public Law 95-626, enacted in November of 1978, included a provision, section 403, which directed the Secretary of HEW to conduct a "study of studies of (1) the relative health risks associated with smoking cigarettes of varying levels of tar, nicotine, and carbon monoxide; and (2) the health risks associated with smoking cigarettes containing any substances commonly added to commercially manufactured cigarettes."

The 1981 Surgeon General's report, subtitled, The Changing Cigarette, addressed this issue of the potential hazards of substances added to cigarettes. In her introduction to the report, then-Secretary of HHS Patricia Roberts Harris noted "the need to know about substances added to cigarettes is stated repeatedly. At present, there is no mechanism by which government or the scientific community can require disclosure of these additives, which must obviously be a first step in assessing their health effects. This needs to be corrected by voluntary action or, if necessary, by legislation."

One of the basic findings of the 1981 report questioned the use of additives—"whether the new cigarettes being produced today introduced new risks through their design, filtering mechanisms, tobacco ingredients, or additives." The Public Health service had been unable "to assess the relative risks of cigarette additives because information was not available from manufacturers as to what these additives are."

The 1981 report went on to note that "no agency of the Federal Government currently exercises oversight or regulatory authority in the manufacture of cigarette products. Further, no agency is empowered to require public or confidential disclosure of the additives actually in use by the cigarette manufacturers," and suggests the possibility of working out procedures to enable cigarette manufacturers to disclose additives "while still protecting their legitimate interests in trade secrets."

Finally, the 1981 Surgeon General's report recommended that "flavoring agents and additives should be studied by cigarette companies for carcinogenicity and toxicity before their commercial use is permitted, and the results of such studies should be made available."

The 1982 edition of the Surgeon General's report on the Health consequences of smoking addressed the issue of the relationship between smoking and a single disease—cancer. This report stands as the strongest indictment to date of smoking as a significant causal factor in the development of several kinds of cancer. In his foreword to the report, Dr. Edward Brandt, Assistant Secretary of HHS for Health, describes cigarette smoking as "the major single cause of cancer mortality in the United States." The Surgeon General, Dr. C. Everett Koop, in his preface describes cigarette smoking as "the chief, single avoidable cause of death in our society and the most important public health issue of our time."

The 1982 report states that cigarette smoking is a major cause of cancers of the lung, larynx, oral cavity, and esophagus, and is a contributory factor for the development of cancers of the bladder, pancreas, and kidney. The "contributory factor" by no means excludes the possibility of a causal role of smoking in cancer of these types.

Cancer has been the second most common cause of death in the United States and accounts for an estimated 430,000 deaths annually. Furthermore, the report estimates that tobacco's contribution to all cancer related deaths is 30 percent, with cigarette smokers having total cancer rates twice that of nonsmokers. This means that 129,000 Americans will die of cancer this year because of higher overall cancer death rates existing among smokers as compared to nonsmokers.

The long-range goal of the Federal Government's anti-smoking effort, is to eliminate the premature deaths, disabilities, and health care costs associated with cigarette smoking. Not only is cigarette smoking associated with approximately 300,000 deaths each year, but health care costs are estimated to be $12-13 billion annually due to smoking. The Department of HHS estimates that $25 billion in productivity is lost annually as a result of smoking. Although the percentage of adult smokers in the population (32.6 percent) is at its lowest level in 45 years, 54 million Americans still smoke and 3.5 million adolescents between 12 and 18 years of age are current regular smokers.

The Department's efforts to reduce or eliminate the consequences of smoking focus on specific programs designed to:

Educate cigarette smokers in the general population as to the health risks of smoking.

Educate women who smoke, especially those who are pregnant, take oral contraceptives, or have increased risk of disease due to other factors of the adverse health effects of their smoking.

Educate children and adolescents of the adverse health effect of taking up smoking.

Educate persons exposed to occupational health hazards, including asbestos, of the additional health risks if they smoke.

Collect information pertaining to the prevalence, attitudinal, epidemiologic, economic factors and any other data on smoking, for the purpose of further research, planning, and evaluation.

In May 1981, the Federal Trade Commission published a staff report on its investigation of cigarette advertising. The report found that past efforts of the FTC, the Congress, and other government agencies and private organizations to increase the amount of information on the hazards of cigarette smoking available to consumers have had an important impact. According to the report, many more consumers at the present time are aware that smoking is hazardous to their health than were in 1964, at the time of the first Surgeon General's report. The percentage of Americans who smoke cigarettes has declined significantly over the same time period, and a substantially larger number of those who do smoke now smoke cigarettes with lower levels of "tar" and nicotine.

Despite this, the FTC staff report found that the problems which prompted the Commission to act on smoking and health in the past still existed. For instance, while most Americans are aware generally that smoking is hazardous, some consumers, smokers in particular, do not know this basic fact. In addition, according to the FTC, the evidence indicates that many consumers do not have enough information about the health risks of smoking to know how dangerous smoking is, i.e., what is the nature and extent of the health risks of smoking.

The data discussed in the FTC report indicates that many Americans still do not know what specific diseases are related to smoking. For example, the report cites polls showing that over 30 percent of the public was unaware of the relationship between smoking and heart disease. Nearly 50 percent of all women did not know that smoking during pregnancy increases the risk of still-birth and miscarriage. Approximately 30 percent of those polled did not know about the relationship between smoking, birth control pills, and the risk of heart disease. Even for lung cancer, which was the first and is probably the best-known disease associated with smoking, it was clear that gaps still remain in consumer knowledge about smoking—20 percent of those polled did not know that smoking causes cancer.

The apparent gap between current scientific knowledge about the health risks of smoking and the lack of specific consumer understanding of these risks led FTC staff to conclude that the current warning statement on cigarette packages and in advertisements is ineffective. The report concludes that additional action designed to provide consumers with more specific information about the health consequences of smoking is necessary. Of the numerous options considered to accomplish this, the report concludes that the actions most likely to be effective would be: (1) Additional funding for expanded educational efforts, such as public service announcements; (2) changing the shape and increasing the size of the current warning; and (3) replacing the current warning with a system of short rotational warnings. * * *

V. COMMITTEE VIEWS

The Committee endorses the views published by the surgeon general in the 1982 report on smoking and health which state that cigarette smoking is the number one cause of premature death in the United States. This is strong language, but the evidence implicating cigarette smoking as a causative factor of many diseases is overwhelming. Over 30,000 scientific studies have linked cigarette smoking with various diseases, and the committee believes it is the responsibility of Congress to convey this message to our citizens.

The Committee believes S. 772 is timely and necessary to facilitate a renewed national public education effort to make our citizens more aware of the health consequences of smoking. The Committee does not deem this legislation as regulatory, unduly nor proscriptive of our citizens right to smoke, but simply as an appropriate and necessary federal effort to provide public education. In fact, the Committee believes preventive medicine and health promotion are among the highest priorities of our national health policy, and this legislation is one part of an effort to enhance these activities at the federal level.

Recent estimates put the cost of smoking in excess of $38 billion—the combined cost of lost productivity and providing health care for smoking related illnesses. In fact, almost $4.0 billion are expended under Medicare and Medicaid for treating smoking related illnesses. The Committee believes that this legislation holds the promise of making a major contribution to constraining the dramatic increases in the cost of health care.

The Committee recognizes the work of the major voluntary agencies in bringing this legislation to pass, specifically, the American Heart Association, The American Cancer Society, the American Lung Association, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists and American Academy of Pediatrics, all effectively represented by the Coalition on Smoking or Health. In addition to these organizations, virtually every other health professional and voluntary organization has endorsed this effort. The Committee has appreciated the overwhelming support for this legislation, and has been impressed with the efforts of the many individuals and groups in assisting, in development of this bill. . . .

The Committee recognizes this legislative effort if only a part of what is necessary to educate Americans of the health hazards admitted with smoking, and thereby reduce the numbers of smokers. Continued cooperation among private, public, and voluntary organizations in informing our citizens about the adverse health consequences of smoking is essential to achieve the long-term goal of the Smoking Prevention Health and Education Act of 1983.

BASIC FACTS ON CIGARETTE SMOKING

Cigarette smoking is the single most preventable cause of premature death and illness in the United States.

Cigarette smoking accounts for more than 340,000 premature deaths each year and debilitates another ten million persons.

Cigarette smoking is a major risk factor for coronary heart disease and arteriosclerotic peripheral vascular disease.

Cigarette smoking causes cancer of the lung, larynx, and esophagus and causes emphysema and chronic bronchitis.

Cigarette smoking has been determined to be addictive and the most widespread example of drug dependence in the U.S.

Maternal smoking is associated with retarded fetal growth, and increased risk for spontaneous abortion and prenatal death.

It has been estimated by the Department of Health and Human Services that cigarette smoking results in expenditures of: $13 billion in medical care costs per year; $25 billion in lost economic productivity per year; $3.8 billion for Medicare and Medicaid programs.

Tobacco and tobacco products have been specifically exempt from those health and safety laws which were enacted by the Congress to specifically protect the health and safety of consumers.

Tobacco and tobacco products are exempt from regulation: under the Food Drug and Cosmetic Act; under the Consumer Product Safety Act; under the Federal Hazardous Substances Act; under the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act; under the Toxic Substances Act.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AND LUNG CANCER

"Lung cancer, first correlated with smoking over 50 years ago, is the single largest contributor to the total cancer death rate. Lung cancer alone accounts for fully 25 percent of all cancer deaths in this country; it is estimated that 85 percent of lung cancer cases are due to cigarette smoking. Overall, smokers are 10 times as likely to die from lung cancer that are nonsmokers. Heavy smokers are 15 to 25 times more at risk than nonsmokers. The total number of lung cancer deaths in the United States increased from 18,313 in 1950 to 90,828 in 1977. The lung cancer death rate for women is currently rising faster than the lung cancer death rate for men, a fact that reflects the later adoption of smoking by large numbers of women. The lung cancer death rate for women will soon surpass that of breast cancer, currently the leading cause of cancer mortality in women. The American Cancer Society estimates there will be 111,000 lung cancer related deaths in 1982, of which 80,000 will be in men and 31,000 in women.

"Quitting smoking reduces one's cancer risk substantially, compared with continuing smoking, even many years after cigarette smoking. The more one is off cigarettes, the greater the reduction in excess cancer risk. Fifteen years after quitting cigarette smoking, the former smoker's lung cancer risk for example is reduced to that observed in nonsmokers."—"The Health Consequences of Smoking—Cancer, A Report of the Surgeon General, 1982," U.S. Public Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AND HEART DISEASE

"Although many smokers are concerned about their increased risk of lung cancer, the fact is that coronary heart disease (CHD) and its complications, such as heart attacks or sudden cardiac death, are even more prevalent consequence of smoking. Smoking related CHD deaths are estimated to over 250,000 per year in the U.S. Data from the Framingham Heart Study indicate that the death rate from myocardial infraction of heart attacks and sudden death is twice as great for smokers as for nonsmoker. It is not known which of the many components of cigarette smoke are responsible for the increased risk of heart attack. Nicotine has a variety of cardiovascular effects, including raising the systolic blood pressure and increasing the amount of free fatty acids in the blood, a consequence which may in turn promote atherosclerosis and contribute to cardiac arrhythmias. Carbon monoxide another smoke constituent, had an affinity for hemoglobin, and because of this reduces the amount of oxygen available to the heart muscle.

"The importance of quitting cannot be overestimated. Results of the MRFIT study showed that CHD mortality rates in men who quit smoking during the first year of the study was almost 50 percent lower than in those who continued to smoke.

"I can think of no single act that could reverse this situation (high rates of death and disability from cardiovascular diseases) as much as the cessation of cigarette smoking."—Testimony of Claude Lenfant, M.D., Director of the National Heart Lung and Blood Institute (National Institutes of Health) Before the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, 3/9/83.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AND CANCER

"Tobacco's contribution to all cancer deaths is estimated to be 30 percent accounting for the deaths of approximately 130,000 Americans annually.

"It is estimated that 13,000 individuals will die in 1983 from laryngeal and oral cancers. Fifty to seventy percent of these cancer deaths are estimated to be causally related to smoking.

"In 1983 estimates are that 8,500 deaths will be caused by esophageal cancer. Cigarette smoking is estimated to be a factor in over half of these deaths.

"In 1983 more than 56,000 people will develop bladder and kidney cancer. Over 19,000 individuals will die from these forms of cancer. Various investigators have estimated that between 30 and 40 percent of bladder cancers are smoking related.

"Finally more than 25,000 cancers of the pancreas will develop in 1983. Nearly 23,000 individuals will die from this cancer this year, only 3 percent of those afflicted can anticipate surviving 5 years.

"I think that the scientific base linking cigarette smoking to certain cancer, frequently those most difficult to treat is unambiguous. Smoking is detrimental to health. However, it is clear that prevention can be effective."—Testimony of Vincent T. Devita, M.D., Director, National Cancer Institute, (National Institutes of Health) Before the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, 3/9/83.

SMOKING AND RESPIRATORY DISEASES

"Cigarette smoking is the single most important risk factor for chronic obstructive lung diseases, such as chronic bronchitis and emphysema. It also increases vulnerability to acute upper and lower respiratory infections, and a history of frequent respiratory infections may well predispose to the development of chronic obstructive lung disease later on. Collectively, these lung diseases are the sixth leading cause of death in the United States. The social and economic toll of diseases of the lung is both severe and rising rapidly. The total economic costs of lung and related respiratory diseases were over $21 billion in 1979, six percent of the total cost of illness in the United States. These diseases are also the leading cause of morbidity costs, representing almost 18 percent of the total. There are more work days lost from respiratory disorders than from any other category of illness."—Testimony of Claude Lenfant, M.D., Director of the National Heart Lung and Blood Institute (National Institutes of Health) Before the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, 3/9/83.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AND PREGNANCY

"A woman who smokes during pregnancy not only risks her own health but also changes the conditions under which her baby develops. Maternal smoking during pregnancy decreases fetal growth rate; increases the incidence of spontaneous abortion fetal death and neonatal death, and pregnancy complications including those that predispose to preterm delivery. There are also possible effects on lactation, and adverse long-term growth and behavorial effects on surviving children. The relationships between maternal smoking and the outcomes have been established by clinical, pathological, and especially epidemiological studies. These damaging effects have been repeatedly shown to operate independently of all other factors that influence the outcome of pregnancy. The effects are increased by heavier smoking and are reduced if a woman stops smoking during pregnancy."—Testimony of Mortimer B. Lipsett, M.D., Director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (National Institutes of Health) before the Subcommittee on Health, and the Environment, 3/9/83.

CIGARETTE SMOKING AS AN ADDICTION

"For years, smoking was thought of as a habit—a nasty habit. It has now been established that for many smokers it is more than this, that it is, in fact the most widespread example of drug dependence in our country. Smokers can break themselves of smoking and every year hundreds of thousands do, but this can be very difficult.

"All drugs that produce dependence have at least four characteristics in common. All of them are psychoactive. They affect the chemistry of the brain and the nervous system. By definition they create dependence and lead to compulsive use. This is at least as true of cigarettes as of other drugs and other substances of abuse. When one gives up a drug abruptly, one may experience physiological and psychological distress. The severity will vary from one drug to another and from one person to another. Finally there is a strong tendency among former users to relapse, sometimes months or even years after quitting. Cigarette smokers experience this to perhaps a greater degree than do users of other drugs and substances of abuse."—Excerpt from "Why People Smoke Cigarettes," U.S. Public Health Service, developed from testimony delivered before the Congress by William Pollin, M.D., Director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 11, 1984]

20 YEARS AFTER THE FIRST WARNING, KILLER HABIT IS STILL DYING HARD

(By Cristine Russell)

Twenty years ago this morning, 200 reporters were held in the locked auditorium of the new State Department building for two hours as the U.S. surgeon general and a 10-member jury of experts presented top-secret findings on the hazards of smoking.

Their conclusion, reached after 15 months of deliberation, was that cigarette smoking causes lung cancer, beyond a scientific doubt, and poses a major risk of heart disease and other illnesses as well.

"The immediate impact was really quite bombastic," recalled Dr. Luther L. Terry, 72, the surgeon general responsible for the famous 387-page report. "It really shook things up for the first time, even though evidence had been accumulating for quite a few years."

Headlines trumpeted the report around the world, touching off an anti-smoking campaign that has changed personal smoking habits and public policy dramatically.

Yet, on the anniversary of the landmark volume, the success of the war on smoking has been mixed. Fighting not only a powerful industry but a powerfully seductive product that the government now pronounces "addictive," they have found that extinguishing the more than 600 billion cigarettes still smoked each year in the United States has been far more difficult than originally envisioned.

The prevalence of cigarette smoking—at an all-time high before the report—has declined slowly over the last two decades, from 42 percent of adult Americans to 33 percent at last count.

The drop has been most precipitous in men, from more than half of all men to 38 percent, but less drastic among women, from about one-third to nearly 30 percent. A reminder of the cost of women's new equality in smoking is the government's projection that lung cancer will surpass breast cancer this year as the leading cancer killer of women.

Among young people, the rise in cigarette consumption in the early 1970s, particularly among girls, has been followed by a decline in recent years, but a 1982 survey of high school seniors showed that more than 20 percent said they smoked cigarettes daily.

While per capita consumption has slumped from 4,345 cigarettes annually in 1963 to about 3,512 in 1983 and the number of total cigarettes smoked has dropped recently, over all cigarette comsumption still showed a 15 percent rise over the past 20 years.

"The industry is certainly alive and well," said Tobacco Institute spokesman William Toohey Jr.

Thirty million Americans say they have given up the habit, but fifty three million Americans still smoke, and those who smoke more, according to the federal Office on Smoking and Health. From 1965 to 1980 the proportion of smokers lighting up 25 or more cigarettes daily grew from 25 to 34 percent among men and 14 to 24 percent among women who smoke.

University of Michigan researcher Kenneth Warner recently calculated that the anti-smoking effort had prevented some 200,000 premature deaths overall. But, he noted, this "significant" public health success story should be weighed against the 4 million people who died from 1964 to 1978 because they smoked. The government estimates that more then 300,000 premature deaths annually are attributable to cigarettes.

"That the toll of smoking warrants remedial action has long been accepted by the medical and health policy communities. The problem is frustrating because of its magnitude and its slowness to yield to the weight of the evidence." Warner said.

The government's scientific indictments have become far stronger in recent years, although the Tobacco Institute, the prominent voice of the cigarette industry, continues to dispute the conclusions.

"There are many questions that are still unresolved . . . . The mechanisms are not known," said media-relations director Toohey.

While the original surgeon general's report found cigarettes a cause of cancers of the lung and larynx (voice box), later volumes have linked smoking with about 30 percent of cancer deaths overall, including cancers of the mouth, esophagus, bladder, kidney and pancreas.

The 1964 volume found a greater risk of heart disease among cigarette smokers, concluding that it would be prudent to assume that smoking was a cause of the country's No. 1 killer but that it was not yet proven.

Today, "We clearly have a body of evidence that now says this is a casual relationship," accounting for roughly one-third of coronary heart disease, said Donald Shopland, who has worked on each of the 16 surgeon general smoking reports.

Evidence of the hazards of chronic lung diseases—the subject of the upcoming 1984 report—has also grown. And although still controversial, evidence of possible health risks to nonsmokers, from lung disease to cancer, is mounting as well.

At the same time, shifting public policy has put smokers increasingly on the defensive. It began shortly after the 1964 report, with the enactment of a law requiring warning labels on cigarette packages.

In the late 1960s the Federal Communications Commission ruled that anti-smoking commercials be given equal time to balance cigarette advertising on television, a practice that continued until a 1970 law banned TV cigarette advertising and gave the government power to require warnings in other advertising.

While the "first front" consisted of health warnings, the "second front in the war on smoking" started a decade ago, with the nonsmokers' rights movement, said anti-smoking activist John Banzhaf. (News reports at the time noted that U.S. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger was among those complaining to the Federal Aviation Administration in 1970 about smoking on airplanes.)

It moved from federal actions in the early 1970s limiting smoking on buses and airplanes to a multitude of state and local jurisdictions decreeing "nonsmoking" restrictions in public places.

"Smoking may eventually go the way of chewing and spitting tobacco simply because of social pressures and restrictions on the activity in public places," said Banzhaf, head of Action on Smoking and Health.

He sees a "third front" opening up—the "economics of smoking"—as groups like his try to "convince people that smoking is burning a hole in their pockets" with an estimated $37 to $50 billion a year in health costs, lost productivity and fires.

On Capitol Hill, where tobacco-state legislators traditionally have exercised tremendous power, anti-smoking activists also have made headway in attempts to change government tobacco subsidies and strengthen the existing warning label with a variety of warnings about the risks of specific diseases, dangers to unborn children and cigarettes' addictiveness.

The federal government's war on smoking has suffered from a lack of money and top-level attention, said former surgeon general Terry, who credits the Carter administration with reviving the program but contends that the current administration has "essentially ignored it."

"We've taken the educational route," said Dr. C. Everett Koop, the Reagan administration's surgeon general. "It's slower, but I think we're winning."

Excerpts From House Committee Report on H.R. 3979

PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

H.R. 3979 is designed to increase public awareness of any adverse health effects of smoking.

The legislation would require the display of four specific health warning labels on cigarette packages and cigarette advertising. The current health warning statement would be replaced by one of four statements that would be displayed quarterly on the packages and advertising of each cigarette brand sold or distributed in the United States. The labels would be rotated on a quarterly basis in alternating sequence pursuant to a plan prepared by the cigarette manufacturer or importer and approved by the Federal Trade Commission. An abbreviated series of four warning statements would be required on outdoor billboard advertising. The four warning statements required on cigarette packages and advertising (other than outdoor billboard advertising) are listed below:

Surgeon General's Warning: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, and May Complicate Pregnancy.

Surgeon General's Warning: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risk to Your Health.

Surgeon General's Warning: Smoking by Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight.

Surgeon General's Warning: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

The Federal Trade Commission is responsible for assuring compliance with the warning statement requirements.

The legislation also requires that cigarette manufacturers annually submit a list of chemical ingredients added to tobacco to the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS). The Secretary is required to periodically report to the Congress on the health effects of these additives.

Finally, the legislation establishes an Interagency Committee on Smoking and Health within the Department of Health and Human Services to coordinate Federal and private sector efforts to inform the public of any adverse health effects of smoking. The Secretary of HHS is provided specific statutory mandate to conduct research into the health effects of smoking and to assure the widespread dissemination of these findings.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

On January 11, 1964, the Advisory Committee to the Surgeon General issued a report entitled "Smoking and Health." The report stated that: "Cigarette smoking is a health hazard of sufficient importance in the United States to warrant appropriate remedial action."

Specifically, the Advisory Committee found that:

1. Cigarette smoking is associated with a 70 percent increase in the age-specific death rates of males, and to a lesser degree with increased death rates of females;

2. Cigarette smoking is causally related to lung cancer in men;

3. Cigarette smoking is the most important of the causes of chronic bronchitis in the United States, and increase the risk of dying from chronic bronchitis and emphysema; and

4. Male cigarette smokers have a higher death rate from coronary artery diseases than nonsmoking males.

One week later, on January 18, 1964, the Federal Trade Commission issued notice of its intention to adopt trade regulation rules which would have required that cigarette packages and advertisements bear a health warning. On June 23, the Commission issued a trade regulation rule to be promulgated July 1, 1965, to the effect that failure to disclose a health warning in all advertising and on every pack, box, carton, or other container in which cigarettes are sold to the consuming public would be a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Early in 1965, the Congress began to take action on smoking and health in response to the report of the Surgeon General's Advisory Committee and the action of the Federal Trade Commission. The Senate Commerce Committee held eight days of hearings between March 22 and April 5, 1965, on two bills. One, S. 547, specifically authorized the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to set advertising and labeling standards for cigarettes, including a caution label with the average yield per cigarette of each "incriminated agent," as determined by the Commission. The bill also required that all cigarette advertisements carry the same warning and called for the elimination of all advertising that tended to depict smoking as attractive to children. The second bill, S. 559, required that all cigarette packages carry a warning label plus the average tar and nicotine yield per cigarette. It also prohibited the requirement of any other warning by any Federal, State, or local authority (including the FTC).

After completion of its hearings, the Senate Commerce Committee reported S. 559, amended, on May 19. As reported, the bill required all cigarette packages to bear the statement: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking

May be Hazardous to Your Health." It also provided that no other statement could be required and that, for three years, no statement relating to smoking and health could be required in cigarette advertising. It provided for a fine of $100,000 for violations of the law and required the FTC, working with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, to transmit regular reports on the effectiveness of labeling, information on the health consequences of smoking, current advertising practices, and recommendations for legislation.

On June 16, 1965, the Senate passed S. 559 by a 72-5 roll call vote and sent the bill to the House. In the meantime, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had held eight days of hearings between April 6 and May 4 on a number of bills. One of these, H.R. 3014, required the same caution label as required by the Senate-passed bill, and barred the FTC or other regulatory agencies from requiring any further warning or statement in cigarette advertising.

The House Committee reported H.R. 3014, amended, on June 8. As reported, it was similar to the Senate-passed bill, requiring the same caution label. It also prohibited FTC or other agency action on cigarette advertising permanently, rather than for three years. The House bill provided for fines up to $10,000 for violations, and contained no provision for regular reports from the FTC.

The House passed H.R. 3014 on June 22 by voice vote; then substituted its provisions for those of S. 559, which it then passed, also by voice vote. The two houses went to conference on the proposal, and on July 1, the conference report on S. 559 was filed (H. Report No. 586). In a compromise of the provision of the House and Senate bills, the bill agreed upon in conference—

(1) Required that each cigarette package bear a conspicuous and legible label stating: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health";

(2) Prohibited any other statement relating to smoking and health from being required on cigarette packages so labeled;

(3) Provided that, until July 1, 1969, no statement relating to smoking and health could be required in any advertisement of cigarettes the packages of which were labeled in accordance with the act;

(4) Established a penalty of $10,000 for violations; and

(5) Required the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Federal Trade Commission to submit annual reports and recommendations to the Congress.

The conference report was passed by the Senate on July 6, by voice vote, and by the House on July 13, by a 288-103 roll call vote, and S. 559 was sent to the President. A number of Senators and Representatives sent a letter to President Johnson on July 16, urging him to veto the bill because it did not go far enough, and that "instead of protecting the health of the American people, (it) protects only the cigarette industry." The President, however, signed S. 559 into law as P.L. 89-92 on July 27, 1965.

The first of the annual series of reports to Congress by the Surgeon General and the FTC that were mandated by the 1965 legislation were published n 1967.

The Federal Trade Commission's 1967 report to Congress stated that "there is virtually no evidence that the warning statement on cigarette packages (required by Congress) has had any significant effect." The Commission recommended mandatory labeling of tar and nicotine content of cigarette packages and in advertisements, as well as other measures to encourage manufacturers to develop less hazardous cigarettes. The report noted that whether "intentional or fortuitous, teenagers appear to be the prime target for televised cigarette advertising," and that such advertising "continues to depict smoking as an enjoyable activity while ignoring completely the health hazards." It suggested that to counteract then-current advertising practices might require "either termination or drastic alteration of cigarette advertising on radio and television," and would certainly require a "vast educational campaign to negate the image of cigarette smoking as harmless and satisfying."

The FTC's 1968 report strengthened its recommendation to Congress to "ban television and radio cigarette advertising or such advertising should be limited as to the hours at which it may appear; the extent to which it may appear; and the types of programs on which it may appear." It was not until the following year, however, that the Congress began to take legislative action on the subject of cigarette advertising.

In 1969, more than 90 House members either introduced or cosponsored bills dealing with cigarette labeling and advertising. All of these bills were variations of four basic approaches to the subject: (1) creation of a stronger warning label plus inclusion of tar and nicotine levels on packages and inclusion of both the warning and the tar and nicotine levels in advertising; (3) inclusion of tar and nicotine levels on packages and in advertising; and (4) extension of the 1965 act.

In the meantime, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) in February of 1969 announced that it was taking action to ban the broadcast of cigarette advertising on radio and television. Its Notice of Proposed Rule Making stated that "presentation of commercials promoting the use of cigarettes is inconsistent with the obligation imposed upon broadcasters to operate in the public interest." The Commission said that cigarettes posed a "unique danger—a danger measured in terms of an epidemic of deaths and disabilities." In May, the Federal Trade Commission announced that it was considering a proposed rule requiring all cigarette advertising to contain a strong warning: "Cigarette smoking is dangerous to health and may cause death from cancer, coronary heart disease, chronic bronchitis, pulmonary emphysema and other diseases." Both of these proposed rules would take effect with the expiration later that year of the prohibition included in the 1965 legislation against any such regulatory action.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held 13 days of hearings between April 15 and May 1, 1969, on the various legislative proposals before the House and on the issues of smoking and health.

Following the hearings, the Committee reported H.R. 6543 (H. Rept. No. 91-289) on June 5. As reported, H.R. 6543 provided for a stronger warning label, "Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health and May Cause Lung Cancer or Other Diseases," and, in addition, extended for six years the provision from the 1965 Act prohibiting Federal regulatory agencies from taking stronger measures on cigarette advertising. Minority views were included in the Committee report to the effect that approval of the bill would permit Federal health agencies to condemn smoking while prohibiting Federal regulatory agencies from requiring a full disclosure of the hazards identified.

The House passed H.R. 6543, as reported, on June 18 by voice vote after defeating several attempts by floor amendments to require health warnings in advertising and to permit regulatory agencies to act on advertising.

The Consumer Subcommittee on the Senate Commerce Committee held hearings on the House-passed bill on July 22. The hearings concentrated more on the self-regulation of cigarette advertising by the tobacco industry than on the provision of the House bill, because the industry offered to discontinue cigarette advertising on television and radio by September 1970 when major contractual arrangements were due to expire or earlier if the broadcasting industry would agree to terminate existing contracts simultaneously at any point after December 31, 1969.

The Chairman of the FTC testified that the Commission would suspend until 1971 its efforts to require a health warning in cigarette advertising if broadcast advertising were stopped voluntarily.

The full Senate Commerce Committee reported H.R. 6543, with amendments, to the Senate on December 5. As reported, (S. Rept. No. 91-566) the bill would have made it unlawful to advertise cigarettes on radio and television after January 1, 1971; changed the mandatory statement on packages to "Warning: Excessive Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous To Your Health"; and continued the prohibition of FTC regulation of cigarette advertising for 18 months.

On December 12, the Senate passed H.R. 6543 by a vote of 70-7 after adding two amendments. The first deleted the word "Excessive" from the warning label. The second amended the provision concerning FTC regulation to allow the Commission to require health warnings in cigarette advertising after July 1, 1971, or sooner if it determined that advertising practices constituted a "gross abuse" of the nonbroadcast media.

Conference agreement on H.R. 6543 was not reached until March of 1970. As agreed to in conference (H. Rept. No. 91-897), passed by both Houses, and signed into law (P.L. 91-222), the bill:

(1) Prohibited advertising of cigarettes on radio or television beginning January 2, 1971;

(2) Changed the label wording to "Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous To Your Health";

(3) Prohibited all State and local health-related regulation or prohibition of cigarette advertising;

(4) Prohibited FTC action on print advertising until on or after July 1, 1971, and provided detailed procedures for notification of Congress before any such FTC action;

(5) Required annual reports to Congress by the FTC and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on the health consequences of smoking, effectiveness of labeling, and advertising practices.

After the enactment of P.L. 91-222, the FCC vacated its proposed rulemaking regarding broadcast advertising of cigarettes.

On August 8, 1970, the Federal Trade Commission issued a proposed rule to require cigarette manufacturers to disclose the tar and nicotine content in cigarette advertisements. The proceeding was suspended on December 22 when the cigarette companies agreed voluntarily to make this disclosure. In February of 1971, advertisements conforming to this agreement began to appear and by December of that year, all cigarette advertisements were in conformity.

In 1973, Congress acted to amend the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act of 1965 to include little cigars as defined, under the broadcast advertising prohibition. The Senate Commerce Committee, acting without hearings, reported S. 1165 on April 5, 1973 (S. Rept. no. 93-103) and the Senate passed it on April 10, and again after reconsideration on April 30. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce held hearings on H.R. 3828 and H.R. 7482 on May 22, 23, and 24, and reported H.R. 7482 on June 22 (H. Rept. no. 93-323). On September 10, the House passed the Senate bill in lieu of its own measure and the Little Cigar Act of 1973 was signed into law on September 20, 1973, as P.L. 93-109.

In July of 1977, the Federal Trade Commission, in its annual report to the Congress, recommended a stronger warning label on cigarette packages plus the inclusion of tar and nicotine content both on the package and in all advertising. The Commission suggested two warning statements: "Warning: Cigarette Smoking is Dangerous to Health and May Cause Death from Cancer, Coronary Heart Disease, Chronic Bronchitis, Pulmonary Emphysema, and Other Diseases"; or "Warning: Cigarette Smoking is a Major Health Hazard and May Result in Your Death." The FTC also recommended that a strong warning label be placed on little cigar packages.

The FTC's 1979 report to Congress reiterated its suggestion that Congress consider strengthening the language of the warning label and adopting a rotational system of warning labels.

In May 1981, the Federal Trade Commission published a staff report on its investigation of cigarette advertising which concluded that additional action was needed to provide consumers with more specific information about the health consequences of smoking. Of the numerous options considered to accomplish this, the report recommends that the actions most likely to be effective would be: (1) Additional funding for expanded educational efforts, such as public service announcements; (2) changing the shape and increasing the size of the current warning; and (3) replacing the current warning with a system of short rotational warnings.[1]

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR THE LEGISLATION

The U.S. Surgeon General, Dr. C. Everett Koop, has characterized cigarette smoking as ". . . the chief, single avoidable cause of death in our society and the most important public issue of our time." [2]

With passage of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act of 1965 (P.L. 89-92), the Congress formally required that cigarette packages display a health warning label. While Federal laws that protect the public from hazardous food, drugs and consumer products do not apply to cigarettes, the Federal government resolved to inform the public about the relationship between smoking and health.

In 1969, the 1965 warning label was revised with passage of the "Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act" (P.L. 91-222) to its current format:

"WARNING: The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health."

In the thirteen years since passage of P.L. 91-222, scientific research has yielded much concerning the health effects of smoking. Cigarettes have been identified by the Surgeon General as a major risk factor in deaths due to cardiovascular disease.[3] The Surgeon General has also found that cigarette smoking significantly elevates the risk of miscarriage, premature births and low birth weight in pregnant women.[4]

Testimony received during the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment's five days of hearings in 1982 and 1983 have convinced the Committee of appropriateness of replacing the current warning with four new warnings to alternate quarterly on the packages and advertising of cigarette brands. The use of multiple messages is based upon a successful Swedish system which combines varying warning messages with broad based educational activities. This strategy has resulted in a dramatic reduction in Swedish smoking rates, particularly among young people.

By updating the cigarette warning, by giving visibility and emphasis to smoking research and educational activities at the Federal level, and by working closer with the private voluntary health section, the Committee seeks to assist the public to make an informed decision about whether or not to smoke.

COMMITTEE VIEWS ON THE LEGISLATION

The provisions of H.R. 3979, as amended by the Committee, represent the product of deliberations between Members of the Committee and representatives of the cigarette manufacturing industry and public health community. The Committee believes there needs to be sufficient time to evaluate the effectiveness of the warnings and educational programs required by this proposal and therefore believes its enactment will eliminate the need for this Congress to consider further revisions in the content of the cigarette health warning.

The Committee did not attempt to identify or delineate in the Surgeon General's Findings, or the language of the four health warnings required by the bill, all the health effects caused by or associated with cigarette smoking. Any reference to the health effects of smoking deleted by the Committee amendment should not be construed to reflect—either positively or negatively—the Committee's views on their respective scientific validity. The spectrum of adverse health effects caused by smoking are discussed in the five days of hearings conducted by the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment on this legislation since 1982.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

Section 1 provides that the short title of the bill is the "Comprehensive Smoking Education Act".

SECTION 2. FINDING AND PURPOSE

Subsection (a) describes seven findings attributed to the United States Surgeon General regarding the adverse health effects of smoking and the appropriateness of conveying information to the public on the health effects of smoking. The findings reflect conclusions based upon scientific research conducted or reviewed by the U.S. Public Health Service and are consistent with extensive scientific research conducted into the health effects of smoking.

The specific findings are as follows:

(1) Cigarette smoking is the largest preventable cause of illness and premature death in the United States and is associated with the unnecessary deaths of over three hundred thousand Americans annually.

(2) Cigarette smoking in the United States is a major cause of cancer of the lung, larynx, oral cavity, and esophagus and is a contributory factor in cancer of the urinary bladder, kidney and pancreas.

(3) Cigarette smoking is a major cause of chronic bronchitis and emphysema in the United States.

(4) Cardiovascular disease accounts for nearly one-half of the deaths in the United States and it is estimated that one-third of the deaths attributed to cardiovascular disease are associated with smoking.

(5) Pregnant women who smoke have an elevated risk of miscarriages, stillbirths, and premature births, and giving birth to infants with low birth weight.

(6) Quitting or never starting cigarette smoking will reduce an individual's risk of illness or premature death.

(7) Federal, State and private initiatives should be encouraged to convey to the American people information on any adverse health effects of smoking.

Subsection (b) provides that the purpose of this Act is to provide a new strategy for making Americans more aware of any adverse health effects of smoking, to assure the timely and widespread dissemination of research findings, and to enable individuals to make informed decisions about smoking.

SECTION 3. SMOKING RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND INFORMATION

Subsection (a) requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish and carry out a program to inform the public of any dangers to human health presented by cigarette smoking. In establishing the program the Secretary is required to:

(1) Conduct and support research on the effect of cigarette smoking on human health and develop materials for informing the public of such effect.

(2) Coordinate through the Interagency Committee on Smoking and Health, the research and educational programs of the Department relating to the effect of cigarette smoking on human health with similar activities of other Federal agencies and private agencies.

(3) Establish and maintain liaison with private entities, other Federal agencies, and State and local public agencies respecting activities relating to the effect of cigarette smoking on human health.

(4) Collect, analyze, and disseminate information, studies and other data relating to the effect of cigarette smoking on human health, and develop standards, criteria, and methodologies for improved information programs related to smoking and health.

(5) Compile and make available information on State and local laws relating to the sale, distribution, use, and consumption of cigarettes.

(6) Undertake additional information and research activities which the Secretary determines necessary and appropriate to carry out this section.

In developing a program to carry out these responsibilities, the Committee expects the Secretary to allocate additional resources and expand the Department's health promotion activities relating to smoking. In addition, the Committee encourages the Secretary to arrange for the airing of public service announcements, during radio and television broadcasting prime time, to discourage smoking among young people.

It is the Committee's belief that the Department's smoking activities should place major emphasis upon encouraging young people not to begin smoking. An important priority of the U.S. Public Health Service should be to foster a nonsmoking generation of young people. The Committee endorses the objective of the U.S. Public Health Service to reduce the proportion of children and youth aged 12-18 who smoke to below 6 percent by 1990.[1]

Subsection (b) provides for establishment of an Interagency Committee on Smoking and Health (ICSH). The ICSH is intended to assist the Secretary in coordinating smoking related research and educational activities within the Department with similar activities of other Federal agencies and private agencies.

The ICSH will be composed of a variety of members representing agencies within the Department of HHS, the Federal Trade Commission, the Department of Education, and the Department of Labor. The Secretary may designate Federal agencies other than those specified in the statute to participate in the ICSH. In view of the concern of the Department of Defense (DOD) In health promotion and disease prevention, a representative of the DOD's Office of Health Affairs could contribute to the activities of the ICSH.

In addition to representatives of Federal agencies appointed to the ICSH, five members shall be appointed by the Secretary from physicians and scientists representing private entities involved in informing the public about the health effects of smoking. The Committee recognizes that private sector organizations like the American Cancer Society, American Lung Association, and American Heart Association presently commit greater resources in activities to educate the public about the health effects of smoking than does the Federal government. It is therefore appropriate and critical that Federal activities—in research and education—complement private sector initiatives. The Committee believes that Members appointed to the ICSH representing private sector organizations should include expertise in behavioral as well as the biomedical sciences.

The Chairman of the ICSH will be designated by the Secretary from among the Members of the ICSH.

Members of the ICSH shall be reimbursed for related travel expenses.

The Committee expects the Secretary to take necessary steps to establish the ICSH not later than 180 days after the enactment of this legislation. All necessary staff, information, supplies and office space should be made available to the ICSH to permit it to carry out its activities effectively.

Subsection (c) requires the Secretary to submit a report to Congress which will include (1) and overview and assessment of Federal activities undertaken to inform the public of the health consequences of smoking and the extent of public knowledge of such consequences; (2) a description of the Secretary's program to inform the public of any dangers to human health presented by cigarette smoking and the related activities of the ICSH; (3) information regarding the activities of the private sector taken in response to the effects of smoking on health; and (4) such recommendation as the Secretary may consider appropriate.

The report required by subsection (c) is required to be submitted to Congress not later than January 1, 1985 and then biennially thereafter.

SECTION 4. LABELS FOR CIGARETTES AND CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Subsection (a) amends section 4 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. 1333) to provide the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with jurisdiction over the content and display of cigarette health warnings appearing on cigarette packages and to replace the cigarette health warning required on cigarette packages and advertising with four new warnings. The warning statements will be displayed on the packages and advertising of each cigarette brand in accordance with a system, approved by the FTC, that would require each of the four warning statements to rotate quarterly, in alternating sequence, on the package and advertising of each cigarette brand sold or distributed in the United States. The subsection also provides a series of rotating warning statements for outdoor advertising which are distinct from those required for all other forms of cigarette advertising.

The Federal Trade Commission is charged with regulatory responsibility for enforcement of the requirements of Section 4.

A section-by-section analysis of 15 U.S.C. 1333, as amended by subsection 4(a) of the Committee proposal, follows.

Subsection (a)(1) makes it unlawful for any person to manufacture, package, or import for sale or distribution within the United States any cigarettes the package of which fails to bear one of the following four labels in accordance with the requirements of this section. The four labels are described below.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, And May Complicate Pregnancy.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking By Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) makes it unlawful for any manufacturer or importer of cigarettes to advertise or cause to be advertised (other than through the use of outdoor billboards) within the United States any cigarette unless the advertising bears one of the following labels in accordance with the requirements of this section.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, And May Complicate Pregnancy.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking By Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth, and Low Birth Weight.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) makes it unlawful for any manufacturer or importer of cigarettes to advertise or cause to be advertised within the United States through the use of outdoor billboards any cigarette unless the advertising bears, in accordance with the requirements of this section, one of the following labels:

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, and Emphysema.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Health Risks.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Pregnant Women Who Smoke Risk Fetal Injury and Premature Birth.

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Subsection (b)(1) specifies the format requirements pertaining to the display of the required warning statements on cigarette packages. Each label statement will be located in the place label statements were placed on cigarette packages as of the date of the enactment of this subsection. It is the Committee's intent that the warning statements appear on the side panel of cigarette packages as is the current practice. The phrase "SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING" shall appear in capital letters. The size of other letters in the warning shall be the same as the size of all such letters as of the date of enactment. The letters and warning label shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layout, or color with all other printed material on the package.

It is the Committee's intent that the Federal Trade Commission be responsible for assuring compliance and enforcement of the requirements of this section. The FTC has responsibility for assuring that the required warning statements are displayed in a conspicuous and legible fashion. It is not intended that FTC jurisdiction be extended to any printed material on the package, including the color and design of the package, beyond assuring that the type used in the warning statement be clear and conspicious by virtue of being in contrasting color with the background of the statement and otherwise in conformity with the requirements of this paragraph.

Nothing in this paragraph is intended to eliminate the flexibility manufacturers currently have with regard to the layout of the warning on cigarette packages to meet the problems posed by different cigarette package shape or sizes.

Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) specifies the format pertaining to the display of the required warning statements on all cigarette advertising except outdoor billboard advertising. The format required under this section shall, with the following exceptions, be the format required by the consent agreements entered into by the FTC and tobacco industry in 1972 and 1981; which in all other respects shall remain in effect. This legislation supplements the 1972 and 1981 consent agreements.

The warning statements appearing on cigarette advertising, other than outdoor billboard advertising, are required to display the phrase "SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING" in capital letters. In addition, the area of the rectangle enclosing the label shall be 50 percent larger in size than that required on the date of enactment with a corresponding increase in the size of the type in the label. The width of the rule forming the border around the label shall be twice that required as on the date of enactment of this subsection. The Committee intends that by requiring an increase in the size of the type which corresponds to the 50 percent increase in the area of the rectangle in which the warning statement appears, that the area occupied by the type also increase by 50 percent.

In addition, the label may be placed at a distance from the outer edge of the advertisement which is one-half the distance permitted on such date. Each label statement shall appear in conspicuous and legible type in contrast by typography, layout or color with all other printed material in the advertisement. The Federal Trade Commission is responsible for compliance and enforcement of this paragraph and should assure that the warning statements appear in conspicuous and legible type.

The Committee recognizes that cigarette manufacturers or importers may elect to advertise in publications, intended for distribution in the United States, which are not published in English. In such circumstances, and as is currently required, the language of the warning statements should be printed in the predominant language of the publication in which the advertisement appears. For example, if a cigarette ad appears in a publication distributed in the United States and which is printed in Spanish, the language of the warning statement should be printed in Spanish.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (b) specifies that the format and type style of each label statement required by subsection (a)(3) for outdoor billboard advertising shall be that required in outdoor billboard advertising as of the date of enactment of this subsection. In addition, each required label statement shall be printed in capital letters of the height of the tallest letter in a label statement on outdoor advertising of the same dimension on such date of enactment.

Each such lable statement shall be enclosed by a black border which is located within the perimeter of the format required in outdoor billboard advertising of the same dimension on such date of enactment and the width of which is twice the width of the vertical element of any letter in the label statement within the border. In all other respects the 1972 and 1981 consent agreements that apply to outdoor advertising shall remain in effect.

Subsection 4(c) specifies the criteria for assuring that each manufacturer or importer of cigarettes will rotate the warning statements in the format required by subsections (a) and (b) every three months and in alternating sequence. The requirement that the warning statements rotate quarterly applies to the packages and advertising of each brand of cigarettes, including billboards.

The warning statements will be rotated in accordance with a plan prepared by the manufacturer, importer or by a group of manufacturers. The plan will be reviewed by the Federal Trade Commission and approved by the FTC if found to be in compliance with the Act. It is the responsibility of the FTC to promptly review all plans submitted pursuant to this section to determine whether the plan complies with the requirements of the Act. The FTC shall approve any plan submitted by manufacturers or importers if those plans will reasonably assure that the rotation of the warning statements will occur quarterly in alternating sequence and which reasonably assure that all the labels required by paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) will be displayed by the manufacturer or importer at the same time. It is the Committee's intent that to the extent commercially feasible and without imposing an undue burden on any manufacturer or importer, all warning statements should be rotated so that the public will see different warnings on the package and advertising of each cigarette brand every three months. The Committee does not intend that the Federal Trade Commission, in approving plans submitted under this authority, require that a manufacturer or importer utilize more than one warning label on any brand during a single three month period.

Nothing in this bill is intended to vest any jurisdiction in the FTC beyond their traditional jurisdiction except as a consequence of their authority to approve and enforce a rotational plan in conformity with the requirements of section 4 of the FCLAA. Enforcement of the plan is intended to assure compliance with sections 4(a), 4(b), and 4(c) of this Act; and violations of the plan and those sections will also constitute a deceptive act or practice in violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In preparing a rotational system for submission to the FTC for approval, the Committee recognizes that there may be more than one system which would comply with this subsection. Any such system must of necessity take into account practical constraints on the production and distribution of cigarette packages and the dissemination of cigarette advertising.

By way of example, a satisfactory rotational system could be one in which rotation of the warnings on cigarette packages will take place at the time the cigarettes are placed in the package. The Committee does not expect manufacturers to rotate labels on cigarette packages that were correctly labeled in one quarter but which remained in commerce during a subsequent quarter. With respect to advertising in print media such as newspapers, magazines, theater pamphlets, magazine and newspaper inserts, the quarter in which the cover or closing date of the particular publication falls could determine the warning that is required to be displayed. Sidewalk poster and transit placards could provide for rotation according to the actual scheduled appearance date of the advertising.

The Committee recognizes that mail circulars and point of sale advertising present special difficulties for rotation as they are often purchased on a single date but utilized for periods longer than three months. In such cases the Committee believes the warning printed on these items should be the one required for the advertising of the respective brand on the day that the item was ordered.

Outdoor billboards present similar difficulties because the useful life of such advertisements is longer than newspaper or magazine advertising. On occasion some outdoor billboard advertisements may remain in service for more than three months without having a substantial portion of their surface repapered, replaced, or repainted. Therefore, the Committee believes an acceptable rotational system for billboards would be one that provided for quarterly rotation of the health warning statement on a brand's outdoor advertisements at the time the advertisement is placed in service or at the time the advertisement on the billboard is replaced, repapered, or repainted. In such instances, the health warning should be replaced with the warning required for the quarter in which falls the date the billboard advertisement is replaced, repainted, or repapered. If the billboard advertisement is not replaced, repainted or repapered during a given quarter, it is not the intention of the Committee to require replacement of the health warning.

In the case of point of sale advertising, mail circulars and outdoor billboards, the Committee recognizes that in some cases it may not be possible to assure that the warning statements required on these forms of a brand's advertisements will, in every instance, rotate on a quarterly basis. The Committee does not believe such limited anomalies are inconsistent with a satisfactory rotational system.

Subsection 4(b) of the Committee proposal provides that the amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect twelve months following enactment of this Act. A one-year delay in the effective date of this section is intended to allow cigarette manufacturers and importers adequate time to prepare and receive FTC approval of the rotational plans required by subsection (a). The Committee expects the FTC to allocate sufficient resources to review plans submitted to assure that all rotational systems are reviewed and, if in compliance, approved well in advance of the scheduled effective date. Any changes in any rotational system proposed by a manufacturer or importer which the FTC finds are necessary to bring it into compliance with the Act should be made in advance of the scheduled effective date.

SECTION 5. CIGARETTE INGREDIENTS

Subsection (a) amends the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act by redesignating sections 7 through 12 as sections 8 through 13, respectively, and inserting a new section 7. An analysis of the section 7 follows.

Subsection (a) of the new section 7 requires each person who manufactures, packages, or imports cigarettes annually to provide the Secretary of HHS with a complete list of ingredients added to tobacco in the manufacture of cigarettes. The list provided pursuant to this provision need not identify the company which uses the ingredients or the brand of cigarettes which contain the ingredients. Each person or group required to provide a list of ingredients to the Secretary pursuant to this subsection is permitted to designate an individual or entity to provide the list required if the manufacturer, packager, or importer so desires.

Subsection (b)(1) requires the Secretary to transmit to the Congress at such times as the Secretary considers appropriate a report containing information about research activities and proposed research activities on the health effects of these ingredients, information pertaining to any such ingredient which in the judgment of the Secretary poses a health risk to cigarette smokers and any other information which the Secretary determines to be in the public interest.

Paragraph (b)(2)(A) explicitly provides that any information provided to the Secretary under this section shall be treated as trade secret or confidential information subject to Section 552(b)(4) of title 5, United States Code and section 1905 of title 18, of the United States Code.

Paragraph (b)(2)(B) that nothing in this section authorizes the Secretary to withhold the list of ingredients provided pursuant to this legislation from any duly authorized committee or subcommittee of the Congress. If a committee or subcommittee of the Congress requests the Secretary to provide it with such a list, the Secretary shall make the list available to the committee or subcommittee. The Secretary shall have no authority to withhold such a list if requested from a duly authorized committee or subcommittee, nor shall the Secretary have any authority to control or regulate any duly authorized subcommittee or committee's handling of such information. At the same time the Secretary makes the list available to the committee or subcommittee, the Secretary shall notify in writing the person who provided the list of such request.

Paragraph (b)(2)(C) requires the Secretary to establish written procedures to ensure the confidentiality of information provided under this legislation while it is in the possession of the Department of Health and Human Services.

At the present time, cigarette manufacturers are not statutorily required to disclose to any agency or department of the federal government any of the ingredients they place in cigarettes during the manufacturing process. This provision would supply appropriate statutory authority and supercede, in all respects, a voluntary agreement entered into between the Department of HHS and the tobacco industry in June, 1982. This legislation would permit the federal government to initiate the toxicologic research necessary to measure any health risk posed by the addition of additives and other ingredients to cigarettes during the manufacturing process.

Subsection 5(b) of the Committee proposal provides that section 7 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (added by subsection 5(a)), shall take effect upon the expiration of the one-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SECTION 6. MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS

Subsection (a) technically revises the first finding of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. 1331) to reflect the requirements of multiple warning notices on the packages and advertising of cigarettes.

Subsection (b) amends section 3 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (FCLAA) to define the term "Secretary" as used in the Act to mean the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Subsection (c) amends section 8 of the FCLAA to state that nothing in the Act, other than the requirements of section 4, shall be construed to limit, restrict, expand, or otherwise affect the authority of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the advertising of cigarettes.

This subsection requires the FTC to act consistent with the requirements of section 4 of the FCLAA (as amended) concerning the content of the cigarette health warning, its format, size, and location. In all other respects, the FTC retains its traditional authority over deceptive or unfair cigarette advertising. If a cigarette manufacturer or importer violated this act—e.g. for failure to rotate in accordance with an approved plan—the FTC could sue it in Federal court for failure to comply with this act's requirement pursuant to section 13(b) [15 U.S.C. 53(b)] of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Subsection (d) revises section 9 of the FCLAA to make necessary technical amendments.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am very pleased to support the compromise cigarette labeling legislation before the Senate today. This legislation has been under development in the House and Senate for almost 3 years. By and large, it has been worth the wait.

Smoking is clearly one of our country's major health concerns. According to the U.S. Surgeon General, cigarette smoking is the most important preventable cause of premature illness and death in the United States. Smoking is a major cause of heart disease, chronic bronchitis, emphysema, and cancers of the lung, larynx, oral cavity, and esophagus. The direct health costs for smoking-related illnesses have been estimated to be $12 billion annually; and the annual indirect costs of lost productivity are $25 billion.

In view of the great volume of scientific data linking smoking to disease, and the severity of the risks involved, the low level of public awareness of the specific risks of smoking is shocking. A May 1981 report by the staff of the Federal Trade Commission compiles the relevant survey data.

According to the FTC staff report, many people do not know that smoking significantly decreases life expectancy. More than 30 percent of the public is unaware of the relationship between smoking and heart disease. Many people do not know that smokers are 10 times more likely to develop lung cancer than nonsmokers. Nearly 50 percent of all women do not know that smoking during pregnancy increases the risk of still birth, miscarriage, and birth weight deficiencies.

Legislation to update the worn-out health warning currently required for cigarette packages and advertising is clearly necessary. I was pleased to see that the Federal Trade Commission recently adopted a formal position in favor of legislation establishing a rotational warning system. Based on the May 1981 staff report and the public comments that were received, the FTC concluded that consumers lack important information regarding the overall risks of smoking; that the costs of a rotational warning system were low; and that such a system has significant potential to improve consumer awareness and permit better informed decision making.

The compromise legislation before the Senate is the culmination of a 3-year joint effort involving both the Labor and Commerce Committees. The initial bill (S. 1929) to require rotational health warnings was introduced in the Senate in December 1981 by members of both committees and jointly referred. In March 1982, the Labor Committee conducted a hearing on the health effects of smoking; and in May 1982 the Commerce Committee conducted hearings on the labeling and advertising issues. In the current Congress, there were two bills introduced in the Senate: S. 772, initially sponsored by Senator HATCH and me and referred to the Labor Committee, and S. 1116, which I introduced, which came to the Commerce Committee.

The measure before the Senate today is H.R. 3979, the bill that passed the House on September 10. The text of H.R. 3979 is a compromise worked out between cigarette manufacturers and the House Commerce Committee.

It bears emphasis that the history of this legislation makes the House Commerce Committee report—Report No. 98-805—very important in interpreting congressional intent. Chairman DINGELL has advised me that the report was part of the negotiations conducted in his committee. H.R. 3979 was subsequently approved by the committee unanimously, and it passed the House with little debate. The only Senate bill to be reported by committee—S. 772, reported by the Labor Committee—did not call for rotating warnings, and it did not impose warning requirements for advertising.

In short, the House Commerce Committee report is the only real legislative history for the legislation before the Senate today. Senator HATCH has underscored the importance of this report by having it printed in the RECORD along with his statement. I would like to join Senator HATCH in inviting the Senate's attention to this report as we consider H.R. 3979, and emphasizing that it is the interpretative basis for congressional action on this bill.

H.R. 3979 is being adopted by the Senate today with an amendment jointly sponsored by Senators HATCH, FORD, and me. First, the amendment deletes the congressional findings in section 2(a) of H.R. 3979. A variety of important conclusions and findings are contained, however, in the House Commerce Committee report. Second, the amendment adds a subsection to the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act to make clear that new rotational warning scheme does not apply to distributors and retailers of cigarettes who do not manufacture, package or import cigarettes for sale or distribution within the United States. A conforming change is made in section 3(a)(5) of the bill. I am pleased that an agreement on changes to H.R. 3979 could be worked out in the Senate, and I congratulate Senator FORD and the Senators involved for their cooperation and diligent effort.

As amended, the compromise legislation is, I believe, a fair compromise. The bill provides for four specific new warnings to be rotated on both cigarette packages and advertising. Unfortunately the compromise does not contain warnings for teenagers, as S. 1116 did. More young people are smoking today than ever before, and they are starting to smoke at younger ages. Some 3.5 million adolescents between 12 and 18 are smokers. Also, the compromise does not contain a vital warning that smoking is addictive.

The compromise is a fair one, however, that deserves support. Congressmen DINGELL, WAXMAN, and GORE deserve great credit for pushing the compromise through the House Commerce Committee; and Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, and EAGLETON are to be congratulated for their work in the Senate Labor Committee.

This legislation will help educate consumers and promote informed decisionmaking about smoking. This is an area in which ignorance literally can kill. This legislation is an important step in addressing this national problem.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today the Senate will pass H.R. 3979. As a member of the Commerce Committee and chairman of its Business, Trade, and Tourism Subcommittee, I would like to point out for the record certain technical errors concerning the bill in the House committee report. I think it is important that we have a clear record, and I do regret the Senate's failure to provide its own written committee report on this widely supported legislation. This bill adds new, rotational warning-label requirements to the existing Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act. This basic scope of that act, including its enforcement provisions, is not otherwise changed. Thus, these labeling requirements will fall under the enforcement and penalty provisions provided in current law.

Sections 9 and 10 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, which are renumbered but not substantively changed by the present bill, place criminal and injunctive enforcement authority exclusively in the Department of Justice. Those sections read:

§ 1338. Criminal penalty.

Any person who violates the provision of this chapter will be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000.

§ 1339. Injunction proceedings.

The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction, for cause shown, to prevent and restrain violations of this chapter upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States acting through the several United States attorneys in their several districts.

The act does not give the Federal Trade Commission [FTC] authority for enforcement. However, the House committee report on H.R. 3979 apparently mistakenly assumed that the Commission, rather than the Department of Justice, was the designated enforcement agency. Thus, the report contains several incorrect references concerning the FTC's responsibility for enforcement of the requirements of the act.

The bill, H.R. 3979, clearly preserves exclusive enforcement authority in the Justice Department. This can be readily seen in section 8 of the bill, which states:

Nothing in this act (other than the requirements of section 4) shall be construed to limit, restrict, expand, or otherwise affect the authority of the Federal Trade Commission with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the advertising of cigarettes.

No enforcement authority is contained in that section. It simply states that the required label statements must be rotated quarterly by each cigarette manufacturer in alternating sequence for each of its brands of cigarettes in acordance with a plan of rotation which must be prepared by the manufacturer and submitted to the FTC. In this provision, the Commission is limited to a ministerial function. The bill reads:

The Federal Trade Commission shall approve a plan submitted by a manufacturer or importer of cigarettes which will provide the rotation required by this subsection and which assures that all of the labels required by paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) will be displayed by the manufacturer or importer at the same time.

A plan of rotation must be submitted to the Commission. Manufacturers are not required to submit label statement samples, and H.R. 3979 does not provide for Commission review of label statements to determine compliance with the substantive labeling requirements of the act.

The technical errors in the report may not be of great importance since the statutory language is quite clear on its face. However, it is appropriate that these errors be identified and corrected on the record in order to avoid confusion that could be generated by inconsistency between the language in the legislation and the language in the report.

Although it is necessary at times for the Senate to act with great speed and dispatch. I hope in the future we will provide detailed reports before rushing to final passage of such significant legislation. I do not object to passage of the bill, but I hope these remarks provide a balanced, statutory record.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it has been brought to my attention that there are some problems with the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act. While I haven't carefully studied this bill in regard to these defects, careful study should be given because there appears to be merit in the following contentions:

Sections 9 and 10 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1338 and 1339), which will be renumbered but not changed by the present bill, place enforcement exclusively in the Department of Justice through criminal and injunctive proceedings. Those sections state:

§ 1338. Criminal penalty.

Any person who violates the provision of this chapter shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000.

§ 1339. Injunction proceedings.

The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction, for cause shown, to prevent and restrain violations of this chapter upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States acting through the several United States attorneys in their several districts.

The act gives the Federal Trade Commission no authority and no role in its enforcement. However, the drafters of the committee report on H.R. 3979 apparently were unaware of this and mistakenly assumed that the Commission, rather than the Department of Justice, was the designated enforcement agency. Consequently, the report contains several incorrect references to the Federal Trade Commission's responsibility for enforcement of the requirements of the act.

In fact, the bill clearly preserves the exclusive enforcement authority of the Department of Justice. This is emphasized by the provision in section 8 of the bill, which states:

Nothing in this act (other than the requirements of section 4) shall be construed to limit, restrict, expand, or otherwise affect the authority of the Federal Trade Commission with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the advertising of cigarettes.

Section 4 contains no enforcement authority. It simply states that the required label statements must be rotated quarterly by each cigarette manufacturer in alternating sequence for each of its brands of cigarettes in accordance with a plan of rotation which must be prepared by the manufacturer and submitted to the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission has only a ministerial function in this scheme. The language of the bill states:

The Federal Trade Commission shall approve a plan submitted by a manufacturer or importer of cigarettes which will provide the rotation required by this subsection and which assures that all of the labels required by paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) will be displayed by the manufacturer or importer at the same time.

All that must be submitted to the Commission is a plan of rotation. This does not require the manufacturers to submit samples of the label statements to be used, or their format, and does not entail any review by the Commission of the statements themselves for the purpose of determining compliance with the substantive labeling requirements of the act.

I do not view the technical errors in the report as matters of great importance since the statutory language speaks clearly for itself. But I believe it is desirable to have the errors identified and corrected on the record in order to avoid any possible confusion that might arise out of the inconsistency between the language of the legislation and the language of the report.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, this bill represents a compromise Smoking Prevention Health and Education Act. Its purpose is to educate Americans about the hazards of smoking. The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee reported out its bill, S. 772, in July 1983. Since then, the tobacco industry, at the urging of a number of Representatives and Senators, have agreed to a compromise, which is embodied in this bill.

The Surgeon General, in his smoking report released on May 23, said, "Cigarettes are the most important individual health risk in this country, responsible for more premature deaths and disability than any other known agent." And President Reagan, in proclaiming April as Cancer Control Month, said that, "the single most important step which can be taken is to avoid smoking." Dr. Edward N. Brandt, Jr., Assistant Secretary of HHS for Health, testified before the Senate Labor Committee that he estimates the number of deaths related to smoking exceed 300,000 each year.

The Department of Health and Human Services is making every effort to reduce or eliminate these consequences of smoking. It has programs designed to educate smokers of the health risks of smoking, to educate young people not to begin smoking, to educate groups especially at risk, such as pregnant women and workers exposed to occupational health hazards, and to collect information about the prevalence of smoking for future planning.

In May 1981, the Federal Trade Commission released a staff report which concluded that, despite significant increases in the public's knowledge of the health risks of smoking, the current warning statement on cigarette packages and in advertisements is ineffective. The report concludes that we should do more to warn consumers of more specific health consequences of smoking. Among other things, it concludes that replacing the current system of warnings with short, rotational warnings would be most effective.

H.R. 3979 sets up this system of short, rotational warnings. It would amend the Public Health Service Act and the Federal Cigarette labeling and Advertising Act to direct the Secretary of HHS to establish a program to inform the public of the dangers to health associated with cigarette smoking. The Secretary would coordinate all Federal activities relating to smoking and health, through a new Interagency Committee on Smoking and Health. It also establishes a cigarette "additive" reporting system.

I would like to emphasize that the cigarette labeling bill is a compromise, reached after months of negotiations among the Tobacco Institute, Assistant Secretary Brandt, the health groups, and interested Senators and Representatives. Senator HATCH, especially deserves credit for his willingness to work with the industry and for keeping the pressure on the negotiating parties.

After the compromise was reached last spring, I believed Congress should act quickly to enact it into law. I was sufficiently concerned about the delay to propose the compromise as an amendment to S. 1816, the textile labeling bill. I am pleased that we now will have final passage, and I commend Senators FORD, TRIBLE, THURMOND, and HELMS on their willingness to support a reasonable compromise on an issue of obvious sensitivity in their States.

The Senate should pass this compromise bill. The need for tougher cigarette labeling is manifest. It has bipartisan support, and it is time to move forward with this legislation.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I rise in support of S. 772, the Smoking Prevention Health and Education Act.

This Nation's top health officials have continually and convincingly revealed the hazards of cigarette smoking. Each year, tobacco is implicated in the premature deaths of more than 340,000 persons and dehabilitates more than 10 million other people. Cigarettes are a major risk factor for coronary heart disease, cancer of the lung, larynx, esophagus, emphysema, and chronic bronchitis.

In addition, maternal smoking is associated with retarded fetal growth and increased risk for spontaneous abortion and prenatal death. As Dr. Mortimer Lipsett, director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, testified before the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, cigarette smoking by pregnant women creates both pregnancy complications and adverse long-term growth and behavioral effects on surviving children. These damaging effects have repeatedly been shown to operate independently of all other factors that influence the outcome of pregnancy. The hazards are markedly increased by heavier smoking and substantially reduced if a woman stops smoking during pregnancy.

In recent years, many Government and health officials have repeatedly enunciated the dangers of cigarette use. Consequently, the level of public awareness on this subject has grown slightly in this area. Yet, despite this trend and the valiant efforts of many health-conscious individuals and organizations, the general public remains grossly unaware of the more subtle and dangerous effects listed above. Recent surveys show that nearly 50 percent of all women do not know that smoking during pregnancy increases the risk of stillbirth and miscarriage; approximately 40 percent of all high school seniors do not believe that there is a great health risk in smoking, a significant decrease from previous years in the awareness among young people of the health hazards of smoking. This ignorance among a cross-section of this Nation is proof of a large-scale failure and the rapid need for action.

Who is to blame for this shocking inadequacy of information on the part of the general public? In many repects, we, the Congress of the United States, are at fault; we have failed in our public duty to inform consumers of the risks of tobacco use. We have repeatedly exempted this product from legislation that informs and protects the American public. Under the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, the Congress exempted tobacco products. Under the Federal Hazardous Substances Act, the Congress exempted tobacco products. And under three other major health and safety laws, the Congress again exempted the product that adversely affects over 10 million Americans.

Mr. President, we face a serious problem that we have sidestepped, ignored and all but relegated to the congressional garbage heap over the past 10 years. But I firmly believe that S. 772 is an important answer to this crucial dilemma. This bill requires four warning labels to be attached to every cigarette package; these warnings outline, in clear terms, the health hazards of smoking. By highlighting the risk of lung cancer and heart disease, the danger to pregnant women, and the addictive nature of cigarettes, this act will go a long way toward informing the public, increasing public health, and making up for many years of neglect in this vitally important area.

In addition, this measure directs all manufacturers of cigarettes to provide a complete list of chemical additives used in production. At present, the Government has absolutely no methods for determining what types of chemical substances are poured into cigarettes and no means of judging their health impact. With this bill, the Department of Health and Human Services will finally be able to test chemical additives for their impact upon cigarette smokers.

Mr. President, the costs of this bill is minuscule in comparison to the huge medical costs and even larger productivity losses engendered by widespread cigarette use. I am extremely pleased that all sides have come to agreement on this important measure.

31-059 O-87-32 (Pt. 19)

Smoking remains a troubling problem for both the Federal Government and the public. Cigarette smoking is killing thousands of Americans each year; in fact, more Americans will die during the next 2 years from diseases caused by cigarettes than were killed by foreign soldiers during the entire Second World War. Yet, as has been repeatedly shown, remarkably few people are aware of the grave dangers posed by tobacco. This measure is an important step in the education of the American public, and I look forward to more legislation in the future. I urge all my colleagues to join me in support of S. 772. It is a matter of life and breath.

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act (H.R. 3979).

Since this subject was first considered by the Labor and Human Resources Committee in the form of S. 772, I have encouraged representatives of the tobacco industry to negotiate with the Department of Health and Human Services and the public health community. These negotiations led to constructive changes in the original proposals along the way and finally to this agreed upon compromise today. I commend all of the parties involved in the development of this legislation. The activities required by the act will make a positive contribution to the Nation's health.

AMENDMENT NO. 4411

(Purpose: Clarify applicability of certain provisions of the act, and for other purposes)

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senators HATCH, PACKWOOD, and FORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], for Senators HATCH, PACKWOOD, and FORD, proposes an amendment numbered 4411.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. I thank the distinguished acting minority leader.

Mr. President, last week I entered into discussions with members of the health community regarding H.R. 3979, the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act. I am pleased to announce that an agreement has been reached that is satisfactory to all aspects of the tobacco industry including growers, distributors, warehousers, and retailers, and has been agreed to by the health coalition. This agreement includes deletion of the findings from the bill and language clarifying that the responsibility for rotational labels does not extend to retailers and distributors of cigarettes.

Since the introduction of cigarette labeling legislation several years ago, one concern of many aspects of the tobacco industry was the inclusion of health findings in the bill. Such declaratory statements are normally reserved for committee report language. By including the findings in the bill, they are no longer merely statements but law, and can be used as such in court. There was also concern that including the findings in the bill heightens their significance, closes the door on further debate on the effects of tobacco and establishes a precedent which State legislatures would be hard-pressed not to follow regardless of their own inclinations. In an attempt to alleviate these concerns, the compromise removes the findings from the bill, but retains them in the House committee report.

The second element of the compromise addresses the specific concerns of the tobacco retailers, wholesalers, and distributors. Specifically, section 3(a)(5) of the bill is amended by removing the words "sale" and "distribution" from the provisions of the bill which instruct the Secretary of Health and Human services to compile information on State and local laws relating to the use and consumption of cigarettes.

The intent of this amendment is not to alter the current authority of the Department of HHS to review such laws, but to ensure that the retailers, wholesalers, and distributors are not held accountable for the label rotational system.

Additionally, the compromise adds language to H.R. 3979 which clarifies that the responsibility for rotational labels does not extend to retailers and distributors. These groups were concerned about the possibility of consumers monitoring cigarette packages and questioning the timing of the specific label on the retailer's shelf, thereby attempting to hold the retailer or distributor liable for the manufacturers' rotational plan.

The third element of the compromise agreement is not a part of the legislation, but is a commitment from the health coalition that they will aid in efforts to get some restrictions on foreign grown tobacco. Increasing tobacco imports is the No. 1 concern of Kentucky growers. The specifics of such efforts have not yet been developed, but in coming months, this kind of support may give us more muscle as we try to halt the growth of tobacco imports. I am particularly pleased with this part of the agreement in that it addresses the most important concern of the over 100,000 Kentucky tobacco farm families that I represent.

I never intended to block cigarette labeling legislation. My purpose in opposing the immediate passage of H.R. 3979 was to reassert the interests of tobacco growers and distributors in such legislation. Since coming to the Senate, I have watched the tobacco industry be hard hit—from all sides—by legislation which has forced the tobacco grower alone to assume the responsibility and costs associated with the tobacco price support program. The grower has also felt the effect of the doubling of the Federal excise tax on cigarettes.

All of this legislation has had a domino effect on the tobacco grower as he watches his costs increase and the future of his market jeopardized. Cigarette labeling legislation is just one more blow. The grower, retailer, wholesaler, and distributor, who are most definitely affected by this legislation, were not consulted during the negotiations on this legislation in the House. I have always said that I had no intention of stopping this bill. I only wanted input to represent my constituents and these elements of the tobacco industry. The compromise we have reached does exactly that by addressing not only the original concerns of the manufacturers regarding the findings in the bill, but also the concerns of the distributors and retailers relating to their potential liability under the bill, and the growers who are looking for relief from increasing tobacco imports.

My original request for action on this bill was simple, and would have expedited its consideration. I had asked that this bill be referred to the Senate Commerce Committee for a 1-day markup so that I could have the opportunity to represent the growers and distributors of Kentucky. My concern had also been to reassert the historic jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee over labeling legislation. It is no small matter that the Senate Commerce Committee did not consider this legislation. Had this bill gone to the Commerce Committee, further industry concerns about the House report language to H.R. 3979 could have also been addressed. Because of parliamentary moves, I was unable to obtain a Senate markup in committee and so the compromise could not address several issues in the House report.

I am pleased that we could reach an agreement that is satisfactory to all parties interested in this legislation.

This compromise was only possible due to the willingness of the health groups to recognize my concerns as a Senator representing the second largest tobacco-growing State, and the concerns of other aspects of the industry who were not consulted during the House negotiations.

I wish to highly compliment those members of the American Heart Association, the American Cancer Society, the American Lung Association, and the Coalition on Smoking or Health for their efforts in obtaining this compromise. I found the individuals representing the health coalition to be open, honest, above board at all times and men of their word. I look forward to working with them on the import question and other issues. As with any compromise, no party is totally satisfied, but I believe that everyone involved in this compromise is reasonably happy.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the Hatch-Packwood-Ford amendment to H.R. 3979 and final passage of the bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the actions being taken on this legislation by my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. FORD.

It will come as no surprise to anyone that those of us from the tobacco-producing States hold no great affection for this piece of legislation. The tobacco industry has been assailed from one end of this country to the other by those who oppose smoking.

We have had health warnings for years, a ban on television advertising, and a series of reports from the Surgeon General. I think it is obvious to almost everyone in the country that the warnings about health and smoking are part of the public's consciousness.

Thus, to further impose a new set of warnings and labels on the industry seems, to me, to be both unnecessary and somewhat onerous to the industry.

But I am also a political realist, and I know that some new legislation is inevitable—and if it does not come this year it will probably come next year in a more severe form.

I want to commend the industry for being willing to make some compromise, and I also want to commend Members of the House who helped negotiate the compromise, because they too were willing to bend a little. That same commendation also applies to the smoking and health lobby.

I say this because, although I would prefer no legislation at all, I realize that something is going to pass, and without a willingness to work together for a reasonable compromise by all the parties, we would have ended up with much worse legislation, in my opinion.

I am particularly pleased that several issues relating to the product liability question have been resolved, if not to the total satisfaction of the industry, at least to a degree that will provide greater protection than originally anticipated.

And today I want to particularly praise my colleague from Kentucky for making significant new improvements in the legislation through the amendments he is adding today.

While many of us object to the "findings" in the bill, it is far preferable from a legal and even a public relations point of view that those findings appear in the report rather than in the bill itself.

The protection that Senator FORD is adding for the tobacco distributors is a major improvement in the legislation as well.

And I am especially pleased that members of the smoking and health lobby are willing to sit down with us and work on the issue of tobacco imports. The significance of this lies in the fact that this shows that the smoking and health lobby recognizes and makes a distinction between the health issue and the agricultural issues involving tobacco.

Those of us from the tobacco States have for years tried to make the point that no matter how you feel about the health issue, the fact is that unless smoking is banned—and it will not be—then we will have tobacco grown in this country.

That brings us to the central question of who will grow it and under what conditions. The existing Federal tobacco program has proven through the years to be both an efficient and productive way to grow tobacco.

And if we eliminate the tobacco program, we will throw thousands of small farmers off the farms and probably onto the public welfare rolls. I think even the critics of tobacco will agree that if tobacco is to be grown, it is better to maintain a system which allows small farmers to stay afloat than to cut them off at the knees and push them off the farms.

And that brings me to the import question. Our tobacco farmers are being hurt badly in domestic markets by a flood of government-subsidized foreign tobacco. Senator FORD, Senator HELMS, myself, and many others have repeatedly urged the President to take emergency action to stop this flood of imported tobacco.

I think it is a fair statement to say that the administration has dodged the issue until after the election by referring the question to the International Trade Commission.

But it is especially encouraging that the tobacco and health lobby is willing to consider helping us fight this issue. It is a highly significant issue to the tobacco farmer; in fact, imports could eliminate thousands of tobacco farmers by destroying their domestic markets.

In order to protect the Government against any costs due to the tobacco program, and in order to keep the American tobacco competitive, Congress and the administration has taken action in recent years to protect the competitive position of U.S. tobacco and to protect against excessive costs to the Government.

Having done that, it would be a tragedy if our Government allowed a flood of imported tobacco to destroy the markets we have built up over the years.

The American tobacco industry, including the farmers, warehousemen, distributors, and the companies, may not be perfect. But I contend that the industry has over the years worked effectively and efficiently to provide a product used by millions of Americans, and it has done so under some rather severe constraints.

I have no question that the industry will work diligently to implement this new legislation and operate within the new parameters, onerous though they be. But I am also confident that the industry and the farmer will continue to prosper as long as those of us here in Congress do not persist in imposing ever more stringent restraints.

I hope that all concerned will now give the industry some respite from the constant attacks, let the new legislation be implemented, and let the tobacco industry go about its business of providing a product and contributing greatly to the economic well-being of the country.

Again, I commend my colleague from Kentucky for the leadership, persistence, and hard work he has applied to this issue. The final bill is much, much better because of his leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4411) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to consider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished acting majority leader and the Democratic leader for their courtesy in this matter.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD]. I compliment him on his diligence and hard work and his effective work in connection with matters before the Senate from time to time in which he is interested.

OLDER AMERICANS ACT AMENDMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 2603 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2603) to extend the authorization of appropriations for, and to revise the Older Americans Act of 1965, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their repective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of September 9, 1984.)

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, the Senate now approaches the eighth reauthorization of the Older Americans Act.

Beginning in 1965, this evolutionary process has developed a family of nonmeans-tested programs serving all senior Americans. These programs are carried out by a network of 700 State and area agencies on aging who are able to attend the needs of their seniors because the Congress has seen fit to allow these entities, and their locally selected advisory committees, a broad latitude of administrative license. This, Mr. President, is the great strength of the law we seek to reauthorize today. The Senate and House are again about to renew this license and, in several areas, broaden it while expanding the field of services to, and concern for, this Nation's aging population.

I would call my Senate colleagues attention to the conference report which accompanies amendments to the act. It spells out a comprehensive array of services with emphasis on maintaining a continuum of care for the vulnerable elderly while expanding the role of local and State advisory panels to ensure the full participation of older persons in the planning and operation of the act and its mandates.

Before I outline the major provisions of the conference agreement on the 1984 amendments to the act, I must acknowledge the tremendous assistance given me by the members of the Subcommittee on Aging of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and their staffs, who have helped frame and carry out an ambitious schedule of hearings, meetings and conferences that allowed Senate bill S. 2603 to proceed at a brisk and positive pace through the legislative process. I particularly thank Senators EAGLETON and DENTON for their advice and direction during the evolution of these amendments. Chairman HATCH and Senators PELL, HAWKINS, KENNEDY, THURMOND, and METZENBAUM responded to all requests for assistance and their contributions have made these amendments timely and to the point. Senator D'AMATO, though not a member of the committee, contributed invaluable help and advice along with Congresswoman SNOWE and Senator METZENBAUM in the all important Alzheimer's amendment.

The executive branch staff from the Administration on Aging and Office of Human Development Services consulted with committee staff on several of the more knotty issues and contributed to what I believe will be a better law especially with the State administration amendments.

All aging organizations and interest groups provided helpful position papers and statistics which allowed the committee to arrive at new and meaningful language for the amendments.

Most active among those were the membership of the Leadership Council of Aging Organizations, particularly N4A and NASUA whose membership are most closely connected with the grassroots administration of the act.

Mr. President, I will now briefly summarize the selective provisions included in the 1984 amendments to the Older Americans Act.

Title I: The objectives contained in title I of the act are amended to include reference to the provision of a comprehensive array of community based long-term care services.

Title II: The conference agreement clarifies the reporting responsibilites of the Commissioner on Aging to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Title II: The conference agreement also makes major changes in the requirements on how members of the Federal Council on Aging are to be appointed.

Title III: The conference agreement requires the State agencies and area plans give particular attention to the needs of low-income and minority individuals within the context of the requirement that preference be given to older persons with the greatest economic or social needs. The agreement also includes definitions of greatest economic and social needs which are identical to those contained in current title III regulations.

Title III: The conference agreement increases the ability of States to transfer funds between separately alloted funds for supportive and nutrition services up to 30 percent in fiscal year 1987.

Title III: The conference agreement specifies elements of a State's intrastate funding formula for distribution of Title III funds to be published for review and comment.

Title III: The conference agreement requires that whenever a State agency designates a new area agency after the enactment of the conference agreement, that the State agency give the right of first refusal for area agency designation to a unit of general purpose local government. This would take place when the boundaries of the unit of government and the boundaries of the planning and service area are reasonably contiguous and only if the unit of government can meet the requirements of existing law with respect to area agency designation.

Title III: The conference agreement includes, within the priority service category of in-home services, reference to supportive services for families of elderly victims of Alzheimer's disease.

Title III. The conference agreement requires that each area plan document compliance with the requirement that an adequate proportion of title III funds be spent on each priority service.

Title IV: The conference agreement provides for statement of purpose for the title IV program.

Title IV: The conference agreement includes new requirements for dissemination of information on activities conducted under title IV.

Title IV: Two provisions are added to give special attention to the service needs of persons with Alzheimer's disease and their families.

Title IV: With respect to legal assistance, the conference agreement clarifies that the Commissioner is to provide legal assistance support activities to State and area agencies and to local legal assistance providers.

Title IV: The conference agreement also provides that funds appropriated under title IV may not be combined with funds appropriated under any other act to make a single discretionary grant or payment unless such funds appropriated under title IV are separately identified in the grant or payment.

Title V: The conference agreement places a statutory limitation on the amount of Federal funds which can be used for administration by community service employment projects. The limitation is set at 13.5 percent for fiscal year 1986, and 12 percent for fiscal year 1987. A waiver of this provision allowing up to 15 percent for administration may be approved by the Secretary of Labor.

Title V: The agreement requires each title V project to provide a written notification to persons associated with title V projects regarding allowable and unallowable political activities.

Title V: The conference agreement requires the Secretary of Labor: to conduct a study to identify alternative and additional means to increase community service employment opportunities for eligible individuals.

Title V: The conference agreement requires State agencies receiving title V funds to report on compliance with provisions regarding equitable distribution of funds within the State.

Title V: The conference agreement requires national organizations in receipt of funds to cooperate with the State agency in preparing this report.

Title VI: The conference agreement amends title VI by liberalizing requirements regarding eligibility of tribal organizations for funds. The amendment provides that a tribal organization is eligible for funds if it represents at least 60 older Indians, rather than 75 older Indians, as previously required.

Title VII: The conference agreement provides for a new title of the act, the Older Americans Personal Health Education and Training Program. The title establishes a demonstrated program of grants to institutions of higher education with graduate programs in public health, medical sciences, psychology, nursing, social work, education, nutrition, and gerontology to design and implement health education and training programs for older persons. The new title carries an authorization of $8.5 million in fiscal year 1985 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

Title VII: This new title is combined with an amendment which requires each State to establish at least one demonstration project for health and nutritional education to be conducted by one of more area agency on aging after September 30, 1986, with the States having access to the demonstration programs developed in the years 1985 and 1986 by the title VII grantees.

Title VII: The conference agreement amends the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 by specifying that the term "employee" under the act includes any individual who is a citizen of the United States employed by an U.S. employer in a workplace in a foreign country.

Title VII: The conference agreements amends the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 by raising from $27,000 to $44,000 the annual private retirement benefit and for determination of exemption from provisions of the act.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to agree to the conference report on S. 2603 to extend the authorization of appropriations for and to revise the Older Americans Act of 1965.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to have participated as a conferee to resolve the differences between the House and Senate versions of S. 2603, a bill to reauthorize and improve the Older Americans Act. This legislation will assure the continuation of a program which has effectively provided essential social services for the elderly of our country. Since the Older Americans Act was passed originally in 1965, this act has provided money for programs that provide senior citizens with nutritious meals, information and referral systems that help our elderly find senior citizen centers that provide both services and companionship, and programs that furnish transportation to help our aged senior citizens get from their homes to the services and opportunities mandated by this bill; 3 years ago, I actively participated in the passage of Public Law 97-115, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1981. We made changes in the structure of the law then to give State agencies on aging more flexibility in the management of the grants that pay for supportive services, senior citizen centers and nutrition programs. We found that many senior citizen centers were forced to leave money unspent in one account while other accounts had resources remaining. In Utah, for example, many centers had to close their doors—turning away older people who needed nutritional hot meals—because no money remained to pay for the bus or car that brought the people to the centers to eat, although money remained to pay for the actual food.

Even though Public Law 97-115 largely corrected this inequity, current reauthorization legislation which will shortly become law will expand this provision and allow for even greater transferability of funds. The amounts allowed to be transferred between title III, parts B and C, will increase from 20 percent to 27 percent in fiscal year 1985, and then to 29 percent in fiscal year 1986 and 30 percent in fiscal year 1987. It would also allow a 9.5-percent increase in authorization levels. This would allow $360.8 million for fiscal year 1985, $376.5 million for fiscal year 1986, and $395 million for fiscal 1987. This increase is important since congregate meals provide an integral part of the services offered by our senior citizen centers. In 1982, 140.3 million meals were served nationally, with 694,944 of these provided in my home State of Utah. For those senior citizens not able to leave their residences, an additional 50.5 million meals were home delivered, such as the 489,967 meals delivered as part of Utah's Meals on Wheels Program. Authorizations for this program were also increased approximately 9 percent to $69.1 million for fiscal year 1985, $72 million for fiscal year 1986, and $75.6 million in fiscal year 1987.

Another provision of the act is the Community Services Employment Program—title V—of the Older Americans Act. Designed to promote useful part-time opportunities for low-income persons aged 55 and older, title V provided 62,560 positions in 1983. For example, under the Green Thumb Program of the U.S. Forest Service and the Utah State Division of Aging, 375 jobs were available in my State. Workers were placed in schools, libraries, congregate mealsites, park services, city halls, tourist information centers, and other public service sites. Authorizations in our 1984 amendments were increased to $335 million in fiscal year 1985, $351 million for fiscal year 1986, and $368 million in fiscal year 1987.

The 1984 Older Americans Act amendment also provides new help and new hope for the families of victims of Alzheimer's disease. Alzheimer's is a tragic disease which causes the victim to lose mental capacity and, eventually, physical capabilities. Up to a million people may be affected by Alzheimer's disease with a cost to this Nation of $25 billion a year. New and urgent emphasis will be given to demonstration projects and training of personnel needed to help the families of Alzheimer's disease sufferers. Money will now be provided for health and respite services for the families of Alzheimer's disease victims.

Another provision agreed to in the 1984 amendment to the Older Americans Act was established of an Older Americans Personal Health Education and Training Program. It would develop a program to help older people deal with specific problems such as diet, mental health, physical fitness, hypertension, retirement, health insurance, hypothermia, and legal advise. It would also directly involve the graduate educational institutions of public health, the medical sciences, psychology, pharmacology, nursing, social work, education, nutrition, and gerontology in its implementation.

Many Members of Congress have contributed to the progress and compromise that has brought this legislation to this final stage. Specifically, Congressmen PETRI, ANDREWS, and BIAGGI plus Senators GRASSLEY and EAGLETON should be recognized for their leadership in bringing these issues to the forefront of Congress. I also want to personally thank Senators DENTON, THURMOND, PELL, and KENNEDY, the other members of my Labor and Human Resources Committee who were conferees, for their dedication and efforts to resolve differences in the bill.

I am pleased to have been able to participate as a conferee in development of both the 1981 and 1984 amendments to the Older Americans Act. It gives me great satisfaction to know that Congress is actively engaged in passing legislation which will benefit more than 36 million elderly people—our Nation's largest human resource.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am pleased that we are finally considering the conference report to reauthorize the Older Americans Act. I know that the distinguished chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging, Senator GRASSLEY, had hoped that this reauthorization legislation could be completed by May which is Older Americans Month, but I think that the new programs and funding levels contained in this bill make the legislation well worth waiting for. The chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging has done an exemplary job in developing this legislation and he deserves our praise for a job well done.

The Older Americans Act is the umbrella program that provides a variety of necessary and important services, such as Meals on Wheels and Community Service Employment to our Nation's elderly. Prior to reauthorization of this act, I surveyed my constituents to solicit their views on the programs served under this act. My constituents overwhelmingly responded with words of praise for these programs, urging its extension and expansion. Many wrote personal letters explaining how these programs had changed their lives, enabling them to avoid institutionalization or work within the community. I am delighted that the conference report before us today contains sizable increases in the funding for these programs. I feel that these programs have proven their cost effectiveness and are an excellent investment.

The reauthorization process also gave Congress an opportunity to expand the services offered under this act. I want to mention two major revisions in the scope of the Older Americans Act. Provisions designed to survey the problem of abuse against the elderly and provisions designed to assist the families of victims of Alzheimer's disease. The new requirement that area agencies on aging assess the need for services designed to prevent abuse to the elderly and the extent to which this need is being met is well documented in both. The final report of the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence noted that the available statistics on the incidence of family violence reveal unequivocally that a major problem exists, but they are still far too imprecise to answer key questions about who is most at risk and how resources can be allocated effectively. Hopefully the elderly abuse needs assessment mandated by this legislation will provide those needed statistics and improve our ability to target needed resources to prevent the abuse of our elderly.

Another important expansion of the Older Americans Act authorization in is the area of Alzheimer's disease. Both the House and the Senate recognized the assistance needed by families of Alzheimer's disease victims. The final conference report requires the Commissioner to give special consideration to demonstration projects to meet the support service needs of these families. Needed services such as home health, adult day care, homemaker aides, transportation, and in home respite care for the families. These families need and deserve our help and assistance and hopefully these provisions, coupled with an emphasis on specialized training for professionals working with Alzheimer disease victims will provide some assistance to these brave family members.

My constituents views on the need for this legislation can best be summed up by the comments of an older American from Jacksonville, FL. She wrote: "The Older Americans Act has brought recognition to the American senior citizen that no other program has been able to accomplish. The Senior Employment Program, I have seen firsthand, has given pride and a feeling of self-worth to the senior who finds employment and becomes a contributor to our work force. Nutrition programs facilitate a wholesome meal for the senior. The communities need more funds to provide transportation to the meal site * * * and homebound services. In essence, funds for the Older Americans Act are well spent, fiscally sound, and highly beneficial to the senior."

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, the matter before the Senate is S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984.

I can say with all sincerity that the conference report is a finely crafted compromise—one which on a few points exceeded my expectations. It is clear that both S. 2603 and the House version of the bill shared a common premise—that this Nation's older Americans need and deserve to live independently and in comfort and dignity. As the author of the 1981 reauthorization bill, I know how much many of our older citizens depend upon the Older Americans Act programs for their health and well-being. Furthermore, I believe that all the members of this body recognized the importance of the Older Americans Act in meeting those aims when they passed the 1981 reauthorization of the Older Americans Act.

The final bill, as recommended by the compromise, would reauthorize the Older Americans Act for 3 years at a level of $1.256 million for fiscal year 1985, $1.307 million for fiscal year 1986, and $1.372 million for fiscal year 1987.

There are some aspects of the bill with which I am particularly pleased. I strongly support the provision that will allow States to transfer up to 30 percent of the funds between programs for supportive services and nutrition services. In the 1981 bill, I included a provision that allowed a 20 percent transfer between the parts of title III. The States and communities have had a greater success in providing the proper mix of services at the local level with the transfer flexibility. I am happy that the current bill increases that flexibility.

I agree with need for the provision that provides for a proportion of the members of the Federal Council on Aging to be appointed by the House and Senate. I believe that the members of the Council, with the composition as provided in the bill, will be particularly responsive to the needs of the aging community.

Most important, the bill contains a provision to allow the States to coordinate with their existing programs to receive reports of elder abuse, to refer the reports to appropriate social service and law enforcement agencies, and provide public education for the prevention and identification of elder abuse. The States would include the active participation of older individuals in these activities. I believe that the provision is an appropriate response to a problem about which we know, in the real sense, very little, except that it happens. The provision in the bill will allow the States to participate in a meaningful way in the prevention of elder abuse, but it will also avoid the duplication of efforts that are underway in most of the States. Earlier during this Congress, the Family and Human Services Subcommittee, which I chair, addressed the issue of elder abuse in the larger, more comprehensive context of family violence.

It has been a pleasure and a privilege for me to be a conferee on this reauthorization, under the outstanding leadership of the chairman of the Aging Subcommittee, Senator GRASSLEY, and the chairman of the full Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator HATCH. Furthermore, I would like to commend all the conferees and staff members on both sides for the spirit of cooperation which existed throughout the reauthorization process.

I recommend immediate passage of this important piece of legislation.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on S. 2603, the Older Americans Amendments Act of 1984. With the passage of this bill, Congress takes another step toward realizing its commitment made to enhance the quality of life for millions of older persons in this great Nation. Enactment of the 1984 amendments to reauthorize community programs for the elderly marks the 10th time that this successful piece of legislation has been amended. It continues to enjoy wide congressional support because of the many contributions it makes to the well-being of America's older citizens.

Since 1965, we have seen sweeping changes in our national policy on aging in response to the dramatic shifts in the number and needs of the aged. The programs have grown in both size and scope. Today a complex network of State and area agencies on aging capably administer and provide services under the act. While the budget for these programs in 1966 was $5.7 million, more than $1 billion has been committed to support them in the current fiscal year.

The Older Americans Act is an extraordinary legislative document. It is a comprehensive declaration of the long-term goals of American society with regard to its elderly citizens. The act commit us as a Nation to actively work to enhance the quality of life for all older Americans. Perhaps the single most important achievement of this legislation is that it has creates realistic alternatives for hundreds of thousands of older Americans in delaying, and in many cases, preventing unnecessary institutionalization.

This coordinated system of service reaches into every community in this Nation, making possible a broad range of programs including nutrition, transportation, counseling, and the more intensive home health and social services provided to the frail elderly. The social, economic and emotional benefit derived by those older persons who have participated in these programs is immeasurable.

Even more significant, the Older Americans Act has shown itself to be flexible and responsive to changes resulting from our increased understanding of the needs of the elderly. Among the new initiatives addressed by this reauthorization bill are: further support for families of older individuals with Alzheimers disease; increased attention to issues related to elder abuse; expansion of resources for further research and training in the field of aging; and increased emphasis in serving minority older persons. Additionally, the amendments create a new title VII designed to foster greater coordination with schools of public health in dealing with the health education and training needs of older persons. These are important and much needed improvements.

As chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, I have a deep concern for the utility and efficacy of these programs. I am pleased that the bill before us today recognizes the high priority we should accord to this Nation's older Americans. This act has proven itself worthy of our continued support and its programs deserve full funding in the budget. I wish to congratulate Senator GRASSLEY and Representative ANDREWS for their fine efforts in bringing this bill to passage.

Mr. President, next year we will celebrate the 20th anniversary of the enactment of the Older Americans Act. Since its inception the act has been directed toward giving older persons opportunities for participation in the full benefit of this country's vast resources. Health, economic security, honor and dignity for all older Americans are challenging goals. Yet, through the programs authorized by the Older Americans Act, these goals have become a partial reality. I believe that the new provisions incorporated into this reauthorization bill will hasten our progress toward achieving these goals fully and will, therefore, continue to enhance the quality of life for all older Americans.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on S. 2603, the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984. This legislation reauthorizes the Older Americans Act and makes two minor amendments to the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967.

This conference report represents a significant improvement in the current law encompassing the views and recommendations of both the House and Senate Members. This legislation improves the Older Americans Act in a number of ways, including the improvment of administration of the OAA by providing a more explicit requirement that the Commissioner on aging be directly responsible to the Secretary of Health and Human Resources, focusing greater attention on the problems of elder abuse and Alzheimer's disease, focusing special attention on the problems of the low income and minority elderly, and improving the coordination of services and activities for the elderly.

The problems of the administration on aging have been well documented. Congress' concern in making this office directly responsible to the Secretary of Health and Human Resources was to give this office the necessary authority to carry out its primary function, that is the coordination of all Federal efforts on behalf of the elderly. It is important that the administration on aging carry out this function in an aggressive manner and that it begin focusing on some of the broader issues facing the elderly.

In particular, I would like to see the AOA focus greater attention on the issue of long-term care and home health services for the elderly. The Federal Government has a particular role to play in this area in the development of policy alternatives and in insuring that the development of community alternatives is given priority attention.

By focusing special attention on the problems of the low income and minority elderly in title III, this bill begins to address one of the problems that will only grow in proportion in the future. With increasing life expectancy among this group, the numbers of low income and minority seniors are growing at a faster rate than those of the general population. At present, however, the services available to these people are inadequate. Unless we begin to focus our attention and resources on the problems of seniors who are both low income and minority, we will only see these problems exacerbated.

I am gratified that this bill begins to address the problem of elder abuse. This bill addresses this by identifying the services already available at the State level and by allowing OAA funds to address this problem where necessary.

The need for this legislation is critical. In hearings which I recently held across the country on the problems of hunger in America, I found acute need for services provided under this act. One of the findings in these hearings was that the need for the meal programs was two to three times greater than that presently provided for. This finding leads me to believe that not only is the Older Americans Act important for the present, the need to direct more of our Nation's resources to serve our elderly population will be essential for the future.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished Chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Aging, Mr. GRASSLEY, in urging adoption of the conference report to accompany the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984.

The Older Americans Act, first enacted in 1965, represents the only Federal social services program solely directed toward improving the lives of our senior citizens.

Demographic data on age changes in our society dramatically highlight the fact that one of the most significant demographic facts affecting American society is the aging of its population. The number of elderly persons has grown and, for the next 50 years, will continue to grow more rapidly than the total population. In 1982, 11 percent of all Americans were aged 65 and over; by the year 2025, a projected 19 percent of the total population will be elderly. These statistics represent a significant triumph for our society in terms of our standard of living and advances in medical science, but they bring with them an increasing responsibility to assist elderly individuals to live their lives with dignity.

Contrary to the widespread view, only about 5 percent of the elderly population live in nursing homes. Almost three-fourths of nursing home residents are without a spouse, compared with just over 40 percent of the noninstitutionalized elderly. The data strongly suggests that the absence of family or other support mechanisms to provide health and maintenance requirements is the most critical factor in the institutionalization of an elderly person.

It is this concern with providing support for health and maintenance requirements of older individuals to which Older Americans Act addresses itself. Its basic framework of a network of State and area agencies on aging seeks to provide a wide range of services, including transportation, home health care, homemaker services, escort and shopping services, outreach, home repair, elder abuse prevention, legal counseling, and other services to senior citizens. All of these services are designed to allow senior citizens to maintain maximum independence and remain within their own communities.

The conference report which we are considering today extends the Older Americans Act for an additional 3 years, maintaining and strengthening the basic structures of the act. While Congress has modified and altered the provisions of the act over the last 19 years, and the 1984 amendments make further modifications, it is my view that these amendments have contributed to strengthening and coordinating systems of services reaching into every community, making possible a broad range of nutrition, access, health, and supportive services for elderly individuals. This act has proven itself worthy of our continued support and its program components deserve to be strengthened even in these times of fiscal austerity.

Let me highlight briefly the major changes from existing law contained in the conference report we are presenting today:

TITLE I—DECLARATION OF OBJECTIVES

(1) OBJECTIVES

The conference agreement adopts news emphasis on establishing community-based long-term care services, and on maintaining a continuum of care for the vulnerable elderly.

TITLE II—ADMINISTRATION ON AGING

(2) AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSIONER ON AGING

The conference agreement makes clear that the Commissioner on Aging is to report directly to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, and strictly prohibits the Secretary from delegating any of the Commissioner's responsibilities to any official within the Department not directly responsible to the Commissioner. Under the present administrative structure within the Department, the Administration on Aging is placed within the umbrella agency of the Office of Human Development Services [OHDS] and the Commissioner must report to the Secretary through the Assistant Secretary for OHDS. The conferences agreement assures that responsibility for Federal policy on aging resides in the Administration on Aging, and not in the Office of Human Development Services.

(3) FEDERAL COUNCIL ON AGING

The conference agreement amends the requirement for membership of the Federal Council on Aging. Current law requires that the Council be composed of 15 members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The conference agreement still requires that the membership be 15, but a portion are appointed by the President, a portion by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and a portion by the Speaker of the House.

(4) EVALUATION

Current law authorizes the Secretary to use up to 1 percent of the funds under act or $1 million, whichever is greater, to conduct evaluations of programs under the Older Americans Act. The conference agreement limits the amount of funding for evaluation to one-tenth of 1 percent of the funds appropriated under the act or $300,000, whichever is lower. This amount reflects the congressional concern about the manner in which evaluation funds have been used in the past, particularly the Department's siphoning off Older Americans Act money for evaluation of programs not in the field of aging and for support of general administrative activities of the Department.

TITLE III—GRANTS FOR STATE AND COMMUNITY PROGRAMS ON AGING

(5) INTRASTATE FUNDING FORMULAS

The conference agreement clarifies existing law's requirement that each State publish its intrastate funding formula by requiring that the formulas, and the manner in which the formulas were arrived at be disclosed in sufficient detail that the public can better understand the formula in order to be able to comment intelligently.

(6) NEW AUTHORITY WITH RESPECT TO ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

The conference agreement expands the illustrative list of in-home services, a priority funding category, to include supportive services for families of older persons with Alzheimer's disease and other neurological diseases and organic brain disorders of the Alzheimer's type. The conferees expect that area agencies on aging will provide in-home care and respite care for Alzheimer's victims and their families so that family care givers can have an alternative to institutionalizing the patient.

(7) TRANSFER OF FUNDS BETWEEN SUPPORTIVE SERVICES AND NUTRITION SERVICES

Current law allows States to transfer up to 20 percent of its funds for supportive and nutrition services between these two separate allotments. The conference agreement increases incrementally the allowable percentage transfer from 20 to 30 percent.

(8) WAIVER AUTHORITY

Current law allows the area agencies to request a waiver from the States with respect to the priority services (transportation, in-home services, and legal assistance) if the area agency can demonstrate that the priority service need is being met in the area. The conference agreement requires the area agency to hold a timely public hearing on the issue of a waiver of any of the priority services prior to applying to the State for the waiver, and requires that the record of the public hearing be reviewed by the State prior to granting any such waiver.

(9) PREVENTION OF ABUSE OF OLDER INDIVIDUALS

The conference agreement adds a new requirement that area agencies on aging, as a part of their planning, assess the need for services for the prevention of abuse of older individuals, and the extent to which such need is being met within the planning and service area. It also sets forth certain criteria governing programs for the prevention of abuse of older individuals where area agencies operate such programs.

(10) STATE ADMINISTRATION

The conference agreement modifies the manner in which funds for State administration activities are provided and increases the State minimum when total appropriations for title III reach $800 million.

(11) SURPLUS COMMODITIES

The conference agreement requires that States submit final reimbursement claims for meals within 90 days after the quarter for which the reimbursement is requested.

(12) HEALTH AND NUTRITION EDUCATION

The conference agreement requires that beginning October 1, 1986, each State set aside 1 percent of its title III allotment for the operation of at least one demonstration project for health and nutrition education.

(13) LEGAL ASSISTANCE

Throughout the act, the conference agreement changes existing law's reference to "legal services" to "legal assistance." Let me emphasize that the conferees agreed to this change as a clarifying amendment. There is no substantive modification to the act. Legal Services Corporation grantees continue to remain eligible to receive funding under the Older Americans Act.

(14) EMPHASIS ON MINORITY ELDERLY

In a number of areas in the act, the conference agreement strengthens provisions relating to serving minority elderly individuals. A 1982 report by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights on minority participation in Older Americans Act programs stressed the need to eliminate barriers to minority participation in services sponsored under the act. The conference agreement seeks to give added impetus to the aging network to improve its efforts in the areas identified by the Commission.

TITLE IV—TRANINING, RESEARCH, AND DEMONSTRATION PROGRAMS

(15) PURPOSE

The conference agreement reinstates statements of purpose for title IV, placing priority on education and training of personnel to work with older persons, research and development, demonstration activities, and dissemination of information on aging.

(16) ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

The conference agreement emphasizes training programs for those working with individuals suffering from Alzheimer's disease and providing family respite care for families caring for victims of Alzheimer's disease. In addition, the conference agreement requires the Commissioner to give special consideration to demonstration projects to meet the supportive services needs of elderly victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families.

(17) LONG-TERM CARE GERONTOLOGY CENTERS

The conference agreement requires that all demonstration programs be developed and administered in conjunction with the regional long-term care gerontology centers, where appropriate.

(18) SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS IN LEGAL ASSISTANCE

The conference agreement requires the Commissioner to enter into grants or contracts to provide a national legal assistance support system. Such a legal assistance support system may be provided by one or more grantees or contractors.

TITLE V—OLDER AMERICANS COMMUNITY SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

(19) CEILING ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

The conference agreement establishes a statutory ceiling on the amount of funds each project may use for administrative purposes of 13.5 percent effective July 1, 1986, and 12 percent effective July 1, 1987. In addition, the conference agreement allows any project to apply to the Secretary of Labor for a waiver of up to 15 percent administrative costs if the Secretary determines the additional administrative allowance is necessary to carry out the project.

TITLE VI—GRANTS FOR INDIAN TRIBES

(20) ELIGIBILITY

The conference agreement modifies existing law to allow a tribal organization representing at least 60, rather than 75, older individuals to apply for assistance under the title.

TITLE VII—OLDER AMERICANS PERSONAL HEALTH EDUCATION AND TRAINING PROGRAM

The conference agreement creates a new title VII of the Older Americans Act, establishing a demonstration program of grants to institutions of higher education with graduate programs in public health, medical sciences, psychology, nursing, social work, health education, nutrition, or gerontology to design and implement, after consultation with area agencies on aging, health education and training programs. The Commissioner on Aging is required to disseminate information to the States based on these demonstration programs prior to the States conducting their own health and nutrition education programs beginning October 1, 1986.

AGE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT ACT

The conference agreement amends section 11(f) of the ADEA by specifying that the term "employee" under the act includes any individual who is a citizen of the United States employed by a U.S. employer in a workplace in a foreign country.

The conference agreement also specifies that it is not unlawful for an employer, employment agency, or labor organization to take any action prohibited by the act when such practices involve an employee in a foreign workplace and where compliance with the ADEA would cause the employer, or a corporation controlled by the employer to violate the laws of the country in which the workplace is located.

The conference agreement further amends section 4 by adding a new provision to specify that if an employer controls a corporation whose place of incorporation is in a foreign country, any prohibited practice by such corporation is presumed to be the practice of the employer. It would further specify that the age discrimination prohibitions do not apply in cases where the employer is a foreign person not controlled by an American employer. The determination of whether an employer controls a corporation shall be based on the interrelation of operations, common management, centralized control of labor relations, and common ownership of financial control of the employer and the corporation.

The conference agreement amends section 12(c)(1) of the ADEA by raising from $27,000 to $44,000 the annual private retirement benefit level for determination of exemption from provisions of the act.

Mr. President, the authorization levels for all the programs under the act are significantly increased from present funding levels. I ask unanimous consent that a chart setting forth the authorization levels in the conference agreement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as a member of the conference committee on the Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984, I am speaking today in favor of its passage.

Since 1965, the Older Americans Act has provided a comprehensive program to respond to the many needs of our senior and elderly citizens. These legislative programs, in the areas of health, income, housing, community and restorative services and employment, retirement, civic, cultural and recreational opportunities are aimed at improving the lives of our older Americans.

The Older Americans Act, following its initial passage by the 89th Congress, has authorized the development of nutrition and supportive social services for seniors; provided the authority for research, training, and demonstration projects, and authorized the development of community employment programs for individuals over 55 years of age.

Passing this conference report today means that these programs authorized by the Older Americans Act will continue to help ensure that our seniors not only will have food to eat but also that our seniors will receive proper nutrition through the act's Home Delivered Meals Program and through its Congregate Meal Program. By authorizing these meal programs, the act also provides an alternative social environment for many seniors who otherwise would be eating alone.

The approval of this legislation also will continue the Community Employment Programs the act has established. Not only does this employment program help to provide meaning and purpose to the lives of many seniors but also this employment program helps disprove a long operating but erroneous assumption that older individuals are neither employable nor productive. The passage of the Older Americans Act establishes clearly that our older citizens are employable and productive and that employing an older citizen helps both the older individual and society.

It is clear also that the passage of this act will bridge the gap between our knowledge of the needs of our older citizens and our public policy decisions concerning older Americans. Americans are living longer, but in many instances our Government has not responded to the special needs of this older America. Through the passage of this conference report, the research programs and training and demonstration projects established under the act will be continued. Through the implementation of these programs and projects, we can become more aware of the needs of our changing society and of the public policies necessary to respond to the needs of our older Americans.

I am delighted that this legislation includes two new provisions which I proposed. State agencies, pursuant to my proposals, will be authorized to use funds to establish demonstration projects in nutrition and health education. These projects will help to ensure that our seniors will be better educated in the areas of health and nutrition and that our seniors will be more able to prepare a nutritionally balanced meal plan to assist them in achieving a healthier life.

Additionally, as a result of the ever-increasing number of elder abuse cases and after my own State of Rhode Island completed a demonstration project in this area, I proposed an amendment to allow State agencies to utilize their funds to prevent elder abuse and to train its workers on ways to detect and respond to elder abuse crises. This proposal is included in the legislation being considered today.

When we approve this conference report, Mr. President, we will be passing a legislative program with a proven track record. The Older Americans Act has implemented many successful programs that are directly responsible for improving the lives of many older Americans. As a result of its success, every Congress since 1965 has reenacted the Older Americans Act.

The success of this program is apparent each time I visit one of the many senior centers in my own State of Rhode Island. The passage of this reauthorization will ensure the continued development and growth of senior centers throughout this Nation. These centers make a remarkable difference in the lives of many older Americans. When I meet with seniors at these centers, I am acutely aware of the fact that passing this legislation means food, employment, and companionship for many older citizens. This bill provides direct services and it is directly responsible for making what might otherwise be a lonely and nonproductive existence a very active and rewarding one.

Finally, I would like to thank my coconferees in the House and in the Senate for working very long hours to reach agreement on this legislation. I would like to commend Senator GRASSLEY for his able chairmanship of the subcommittee. I also would like to thank Senator EAGLETON for his leadership and dedication to see this bill through to its passage.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor S. 2603, legislation to reauthorize the Older Americans Act. This act has effectively served our Nation's senior citizens since its enactment in 1965. The legislation we consider today will extend the act for 3 more years and provide additional benefits to older Americans. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Congressional passage of the Older Americans Act in 1965 created the first Federal program specifically designed to meet the social service needs of older persons. The objectives of the act are to improve the lives of older Americans in the areas of income, health, housing, restorative services, employment, retirement, cultural and recreational opportunities, community services, and gerontological research. During the past 19 years, the act has succeeded in creating a comprehensive service delivery system to help older Americans remain self-sufficient and independent.

The Older Americans Act has grown from a small grants program in 1966 to a program in 1984 which supports 57 State units on aging, 662 area agencies on aging, over 8,600 service providers, over 13,000 congregate nutrition sites, over 6,000 home-delivered nutrition providers, 54,200 community service jobs, and 83 Indian tribal organizations. The act is the major vehicle for targeting the delivery of services to senior citizens.

My home State of Ohio is firmly committed to fulfilling the needs of its older citizens. This commitment was underscored recently when Gov. Richard Celeste signed legislation elevating the Ohio Commission on Aging to departmental status. Older Ohioans now have a secretary of aging, Joyce Chapple, attending the Governor's cabinet meetings to speak for their concerns.

Over 1 million older persons are served annually by the Older Americans Act in Ohio. Under the nutrition programs of title III-C, we have 455 congregate mealsites that served 4,697,974 meals to 86,128 persons during fiscal year 1983. We served 1,611,823 home-delivered meals to 17,000 persons. Under title III-B, 423 senior centers are operated in Ohio and supportive services benefit an estimated 1 million older Ohioans annually. In rural areas especially, these senior centers are the focal point in the community for the delivery of a broad range of services to senior citizens.

In April, my wife Annie and I had the opportunity to visit the Marion Square Senior Center in Columbus. We were fortunate to arrive just before lunch and we enjoyed a hot meal with the seniors there. We look forward to visiting other senior centers in Ohio.

The legislation we are considering today will reauthorize the Older Americans Act for an additional 3 years, and it includes several new provisions to benefit older Americans, their families, and their communities.

Title III of the act is amended to establish demonstration projects in health and nutrition education. Beginning September 1, 1986, States shall set aside up to 1 percent of program funds to conduct these programs. The legislation also establishes a new title VII, the Older Americans Personal Health Education and Training Program. Under this new title, grants shall be awarded to graduate institutions to implement health education and training programs in multipurpose senior centers. These projects will address various aspects of health awareness and illness prevention for older persons, including diet, mental health, physical fitness, hypertension, hypothermia, lifestyle modifications, and medication use.

Title IV of the act is amended to provide that special consideration will be given to grant and contract applications for the training of persons caring for Alzheimer's disease victims and their families. This amendment is needed by many families who must cope with both the physical and emotional demands of Alzheimer's disease. This amendment also complements the appropriations we made in the Labor-HHS-Education bill to establish special Alzheimer's disease centers, and to continue research on the causes and possible cures for the disease.

Authorization levels for the act will allow programs to continue at current service levels, with modest growth in several titles.

I am pleased to support the Older Americans Act and recognize the fine work of the staff, volunteers, and participants in Older Americans Act programs. I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation to reauthorize the Older Americans Act.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, Congress established an agenda for improving the lives of older Americans when it passed the Older Americans Act of 1965. As a result of the Older Americans Act, major accomplishments have been made in the areas of income, health, housing, employment, retirement, cultural and recreational opportunities, community services, and gerontological research.

Older Americans may receive services under other Federal programs, but the Older Americans Act is the main program for coordinating the delivery of services to senior Americans. During the past 19 years, Congress has expanded the program from one composed of small grants to one utilizing 54 State units on aging and 662 area agencies on aging. The act has grown from a $6.5 million program to over $1 billion. The scope of the program has expanded to include a national nutrition program, multipurpose senior centers, and community service employment.

After carefully analyzing the issues impacting senior Americans, I am pleased that Congress has now amended and reauthorized the Older Americans Act to meet these needs. One issue of great concern to older Americans is rising health care costs. This issue concerns all Americans, but especially senior citizens living on a fixed, monthly income. The 1984 amendments recognize this issue by establishing a health education and training program for graduate students focused on the needs of older Americans. Health education and training addressing the needs of older individuals can not only play a major role in health promotion and illness prevention, but it can also help reduce medical costs for both individuals and the Government. The 1984 amendments also add emphasis to dealing with the trauma of Alzheimer's disease.

The United States stands at a significant demographic turning point. There are now as many persons age 60 and over as there are teenagers. In my home State of Florida, the number of persons over 60 already surpasses the younger population, and needless to say Older Americans Act programs play a major role in the lives of Florida's citizens. The Older Americans Act has been and will continue to be one of the most instrumental programs in meeting the needs associated with the problems brought on by aging, chronic illness, poverty, and social isolation.

I hope that we can look forward to this program being as helpful and productive over the next years as it unquestionably has been in the past.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am happy to support the conference agreement on S. 2603 to extend the authorization of appropriations for, and to review the Older Americans Act of 1965. Passage of this legislation, as amended, will improve the lives of older Americans in areas of income, health, housing, employment, retirement, civic, cultural and recreational opportunities, community services, and aging research—title I—and provided the legislative basis for the continuation of the Administration on Aging [AOA] and the Federal Council on Aging—title II. The act also establishes authority for development of supportive services and nutrition programs for older persons—especially those who have the greatest economic and social needs—through grants to States, which in turn award funds to area agencies on aging—title III—research, demonstration, and training programs in the field of aging—title IV—development of community service employment programs for low-income persons 55 years and older—title V—and grants to Indian tribal organizations for supportive and nutrition services for older Native Americans—title VI.

HISTORY OF THE ACT

The act was first enacted in the 89th Congress and has been amended nine times since 1965. The original act established the AOA as the Federal-level agency responsible for the administration of programs under the act and authorized State and community social services programs and research, demonstration, and training projects.

Since then many changes and refinements were made—adding areawide model projects to test the new approaches in meeting the social needs of older persons, and authorizing foster grandparents, and retired senior volunteer programs which provide the part-time volunteer opportunities for older persons—these latter programs, currently administered by ACTION, were repealed as part of the Older Americans Act in 1973 which were later incorporated into the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973.

With the enactment of the 1973 amendments, the Older Americans Act was significantly revised and expanded by the creation of a nationwide network of area agencies on aging. Area agencies were given the responsibility for planning and coordination of, and advocacy for, programs for older persons within planning and service areas designated by State agencies on aging.

The 1978 amendments further strengthened and expanded title III of the act by consolidating the social service multipurpose senior center, and nutrition services portion of the act. A separate authorization for home delivered meals under title III was added. The 1978 amendments also added a new title VI authorizing grants for social and nutrition services to Indian tribal organizations.

The 1981 amendments provided a 3-year extension for the act and made certain modifications designed to give State and area agencies more flexibility in administering the title III program. Other amendments emphasized the transition of title V participants into private sector employment under the community service employment program, and eliminated an age definition for older Indians under the programs of grants to tribal organizations.

1984 AMENDMENTS

The 1984 conference agreement on S. 2603 further refined the Older Americans Act by providing community-based long-term care as an objective of the act. This will assist older individuals to secure efficient community service which includes emphasis on maintaining a continuum of care for the vulnerable elderly.

The 1984 conference agreement authorizes $325,700,000 for fiscal year 1985; $343,700,000 for fiscal year 1986; and $361,500,000 for fiscal year 1987. For part C, home delivered nutrition, the conference agreement authorizes $69,100,000 for fiscal year 1985; $72,000,000 for fiscal year 1986; and $74,600,000 for fiscal year 1987.

Other amendments would provide relief to Alzheimer's disease victims' families through supportive services that provide in-home care; require health and nutrition programs for senior citizens in all States; extend protection from job discrimination against older workers employed by American firms abroad, which can currently dismiss them under terms illegal in the United States; require States to publicly disclose formulas used to allocate Older Americans Act funds assuring accountability to the public in the way their taxes are spent; and allow the Senate, House, and President to appoint equal numbers of members of the Federal Council on Aging, rather than having the administration appoint the entire body.

INDIAN REPRESENTATION

I am pleased to note the conference agreement includes language added at my request which specifies that the Administrator on Aging establish a coordinator of Indian programs. The langauge added to the Senate report and the conference agreement directs the Commissioner to consult with Indian tribal representatives and seek their recommendations in filling such a position. The individual must be knowledgeable about and sensitive to the unique aspects of the Indian elderly and must be able to effectively advocate their concerns. In order to assure the greatest effectiveness of the position, the language added to the conference agreement must be adhered to in making the selection.

INDIAN GRANTS

I would also like to commend the Congress for providing an increased authorization for grants to Indian tribes for fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, which are $7,900,000, a 21-percent increase; $8,300,000, an 18-percent increase; and $8,600,000, a 15-percent increase, respectively.

Mr. President, I conclude by stating that my colleagues who have worked so diligently on the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act have achieved a great deal. They have acted to perfect an instrument we can all be proud of. Elderly Americans will have much to gain by these improvements. I strongly support the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I am pleased to report to my colleagues in the Senate that on September 11, 1983, the House of Representatives passed S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act, and sent it to the Senate with amendments. This legislation, after careful consideration, had been passed by the Senate in February of this year.

I would like to take a moment to review the Senate legislative history of this important bill. The Housing and Urban Affairs Subcommittee held a series of hearings on this legislation beginning on March 8, 1983, when the subcommittee held oversight hearings regarding the secondary mortgage market. On May 5, 1983, hearings were held on proposed changes in the charter of the Federal National Mortgage Association [Fannie Mae] and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation [Freddie Mac]. On August 4, 1983, Senator GARN, the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, and I introduced the Secondary Mortgage Enhancement Act, which was cosponsored by Senator RIEGLE, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Banking Committee, and Senator PROXMIRE, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Housing and Urban Affairs Subcommittee. The bill was reported out of the Banking Committee on October 6, 1983. It is a pleasure today, Mr. President, for me to stand before my colleagues and state that the House has acted favorably by voice vote and passed S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act.

This bill, Mr. President, as amended, provides strong benefits to the private sector as it attempts to meet the growing mortgage demands of our Nation. If I might, Mr. President, I would like to discuss briefly the major differences between the Senate version of S. 2040 and the House version as passed on September 11.

The securities title of the bill, title I, was referred to the House Energy and Commerce Committee, Subcommittee on Finance. It was the view of Mr. WIRTH, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, that the exemption for large transactions in privately issued mortgage-backed securities should be dropped. The House has also amended S. 2040 to limit the issuance of private mortgage backed securities to those falling within the top two rating categories as ranked by a nationally recognized investment rating service such as, Moody's or Standard & Poor's. The original Senate bill had defined an investment grade security as being in the top four rating categories. The key elements of title I all have been retained: Relaxation of margin and net capital requirements, enhanced authority for investment by financial institutions, and preexemption of outmoded legal investment laws.

In title II of the legislation, which had been referred to the House Banking Committee, the primary distinction between the two versions regards the purchase by the quasi-government agencies of second mortgages, section 203. The Senate bill would require that the second lien be on the principal residence of the mortgager, and that the proceeds by used to purchase or refinance the remaining balance of the loan used to purchase the residence, that the commitment to purchase the loan be issued by October 1, 1985, and, finally, that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac establish limits on the maximum principal obligation of second mortgages, not exceeding $50,000 for a single family residence or $60,000 for a 2-4 family residence. The House has amended S. 2040 to move the commitment date to purchase the selling or servicing of second mortgages until October 1, 1987, and to limit the size of such second mortgages to 50 percent of the single family residence mortgage limitation. Also, in this regard, the House version allows conventional mortgages secured by a second lien against a multifamily housing unit to be purchased by the two agencies until October 1, 1985. It is expected by both House and Senate Banking Committees that both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will report fully on the status and need for such programs before that time.

There are two other provisions which the House added to the Senate bill that I should discuss. First, the House bill requires a report due not later than 180 days after enactment of S. 2040, regarding mortgage prepayment penalties and their impact on secondary mortgage market activities.

The second item is section 213 of the bill, which removes the authority of the Secretary of HUD to approve obligations of the Federal National Mortgage Association. It is the Senate's position that it is extremely important that the quasi-government agencies, as long as they are affiliated with the Federal Government, should have oversight of their operations not only from the appropriate committees of Congress, but also from the appropriate departments of the Federal Government. In the case of Fannie Mae, this oversight responsibility is carried out by the House and Senate Banking Committees, by the Department of Treasury and the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Issues surrounding the approval of the issuance of Fannie Mae stock and convertible debentures, obligations, and other instruments have raised the questions about the appropriate oversight authorities of each department. Currently, Fannie Mae may not issue stock and securities and other instruments without HUD approval. The Treasury Department traditionally has performed the role of being a traffic cop in terms of approving when Fannie Mae should be in the marketplace with its obligations—as they relate to all other issues of U.S. Treasury securities. Also, the Department of Treasury has been involved with approving Fannie Mae financings when they have impacted some aspect of the tax code. S. 2040 as enacted will delete one reference to HUD approval for Fannie Mae after October 1, 1985. It is my hope, Mr. President, that between enactment of this legislation and October 1, 1985, both the House and Senate Banking Committees will be adequately advised by the administration, Fannie Mae, and GAO as to which department reviews which type of issuance and for what purpose, so that the Congress can determine what the appropriate oversight role is for HUD and the Treasury Department.

In conjunction with the need to correctly identify the role of the oversight agencies, Senator GARN and I requested that the General Accounting Office complete a detailed study of Fannie Mae: operationally, financially, and competitively. It is our hope that some of these questions will be answered in great detail upon the presentation of the General Accounting Office's report at the end of this year. Further, HUD is conducting its own report pursuant to section 208 of this bill. It is interesting to note that this provision replaces an existing requirement enacted in 1977 that the Housing and Urban Development Secretary deliver a one-time report to Congress on the operation of Fannie Mae and the extent to which the activities of Fannie Mae meet the purposes of the Charter Act. That report, due to be transmitted to Congress by June 30, 1978, was never completed. In view of the high degree of widespread concern over the financial stability of Fannie Mae which existed during a period of extraordinarily high interest rates in 1981 and early 1982, the committee renewed its request to the Secretary to complete and deliver to Congress a review of the financial operations of Fannie Mae. Section 208 of this bill requires the Secretary to send, not later than June of each year, an annual report to Congress on the activities of Fannie Mae.

Mr. President, I consider these two reports extremely critical to any future legislation and oversight of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. I hope that Congress will study them carefully, as the secondary mortgage market is becoming, in my view, Mr. President, the primary source of mortgage capital in this country. It is appropriate to note here, Mr. President, that the House Energy and Commerce Committee requested the Federal Reserve Board and the SEC to study over 2 years the competitive impact of mortgage-related securities on the availability of long-term corporate credit and report their findings to Congress.

By passing and enacting the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act, we have made it possible for thousands of additional individuals and families in this country to own homes. In my view, this legislation is important because it encourages the private sector to provide mortgage capital throughout complex capital market system and encourages less reliance on Federal Government support for housing. Although for the short term it will take both the Government sector and the private sector to adequately house America, I am convinced, based on my study over the last 2 years, that the private sector can and will assume a predominant role in the mortgage capital markets in this country. I thank my distinguished colleagues, Senator GARN, Senator PROXMIRE, and Senator RIEGLE for their hard work and devoted effort to the passage and enactment of this legislation. On the House side, thanks should go to the distinguished chairman and subcommittee chairmen of the appropriate committees: Chairman ST GERMAIN, Congressman WYLIE of the Banking Committee, Chairman GONZALEZ and Congressman MCKINNEY of the Housing Subcommittee, Chairman DINGEL and Congressman BROYHILL of the Energy and Commerce Committee, and Chairman WIRTH and Congressman RINALDO of the Subcommittee on Finance. These gentlemen of the House have done an excellent job in improving this legislation and they are to be commended for their hard work and efforts in effecting its passage in the House.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act and to congratulate my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Texas and chairman of the Housing Subcommittee for his efforts in achieving the passage and enactment of S. 2040. This is a good bill which makes good sense. Mr. President, I wanted to rise not only in support of this bill and to congratulate my colleague, but also to reemphasize my strong support of this legislation and its intent to improve the capabilities of the private sector to provide secondary mortgage market finance in this country. I will be most interested in the General Accounting Office report and the report by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development on the operating conditions of Fannie Mae. These will be very important documents to the 99th Congress as the Senate Banking Committee continues to review and improve the secondary mortgage market.

I might add, Mr. President, that this legislation dovetails nicely with the Senate's final passage 2 weeks ago of the omnibus banking legislation, S. 2851, the Financial Services Competitive Equity Act. That legislation, if enacted, will give authority to commercial banks and savings and loan associations to underwrite and deal in private mortgage-backed securities. Such a provision was originally included in the Senate bill, S. 2040, as introduced. It was removed before committee action on S. 2040 in order that it could become part of the recently passed comprehensive bill, S. 2851. Let me further point out that none of these actions in any way prevent depository institutions from continuing to exercise any and all authority they currently have in the mortgage-related securities area.

The combination of S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Enhancement Act, and the successful consideration and passage of these provisions in the omnibus banking legislation will provide untold benefits to housing and mortgage capital in this country.

I again congratulate Senator TOWER, Senator PROXMIRE, and Senator RIEGLE for their efforts on this legislation, and I am pleased to recommend heartily that it be passed unanimously by the Senate at this time.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues, Senators GARN, TOWER, and PROXMIRE in support of the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act of 1984.

This bill would help ensure an adequate supply of funds for home mortgages during a period of profound change in the country's housing finance industry.

The bill now includes modest but available refinements to legislation that already passed the Senate last February.

Mr. President, I believe that enactment of this bill would further three important objectives.

First, the bill would make it easier for private firms to enter the secondary mortgage market as issuers of mortgage backed securities. It would therefore help to open additional channels for funds to flow into home mortgage lending from nontraditional sources, such as pension funds, insurance companies and other institutional investors. The efforts of private companies to expand their activities in the secondary mortgage market is a promising sign. Congress should encourage those efforts so that American homebuyers will have sufficient mortgage credit over the next decade. It has been made clear, both through testimony in Banking Committee hearings and through recent experience in the market place, that creation of a strong private secondary mortgage market will take time and involves substantial risks. This bill would provide positive support by clearing unnecessary statutory barriers that have hindered the issuance of private mortgage-backed securities.

Second, the bill would strengthen the ability of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to provide funds for home mortgages and respond to changes in the financial markets. This bill recognizes that these two organizations must continue to provide vigorous support to the Nation's housing finance system, and it firmly rejects proposals from some members of the administration who have tried to shackle Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as part of a broader effort to drastically curtail Federal support for housing finance. The bill would make several changes in the authorities of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to help make housing credit more affordable to middle income American families, including new authority to purchase second mortgages on single family and multifamily housing.

Third, the bill includes important safeguards to protect the interests of individual investors. Limited exemptions from Federal and State securities laws are provided in a way that would not expose investors to undue risks. States would be given 7 years to override these exemptions if they believe such action is justified by local circumstances.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill is prudent, much needed legislation. I urge my colleagues to enact it promptly.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act. AS one of the original sponsors of this legislation, I support it because it will help homebuyers and homebuilders throughout the United States by increasing the available supply of mortgage credit.

This bill encourages private business to issue mortgage-backed securities, and it makes it easier for institutional investors to purchase such securities. By broadening the market for securities which are backed by mortgages, it will help increase the flow of capital from investors to housing lenders. The ultimate beneficiaries of this expanded flow of mortgage credit are the Nation's homebuyers.

This bill provides necessary safeguards for individual investors. To encourage greater trading in privately-issued mortgage-backed securities, the bill exempts certain issues from Federal and State securities laws. But, these exemptions have been carefully limited in order to protect individual investores from unnecessary risk.

This bill supports the continued activities of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the secondary mortgage market institutions which, today, do most of the trading in mortgages and the channeling of investment capital into mortgage markets. While the legislation is designed to enhance the ability of the private sector to compete in the secondary mortgage market, it preserves the important roles that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac play in housing lower and middle income Americans.

Mr. President, our Nation's secondary mortgage markets are dominated today by agencies which are part of Government or are Government-related. Housing experts tell us that secondary markets will have to expand if we are to satisfy the demand for housing credit in the decade ahead. The private sector has testified that, if given half a chance, it can help direct more of the needed capital into housing. Both the House and the Senate are convinced that greater private sector involvement will help, and both have passed S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act, to get the private sector more involved in housing finance.

I urge my colleagues to approve S. 2040 today.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today, as chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, I am asking that the following conferees be appointed to S. 2616, the Adolescent Family Life Act: Senators HATCH, DENTON, NICKLES, KENNEDY, and DODD. On August 10, 1984, the House of Representatives substituted the text of H.R. 5600, which contains a reauthorization of the Adolescent Family Life Act, title X reauthorization—family planning—and the prevention block grant, and appointed conferees.

I strongly support the goals of the Adolescent Family Life Act and its reauthorization. There still exists extensive national concern over the numbers of teenage pregnancies. As I have repeatedly stated, while the Federal Government continues to spend millions of dollars providing contraceptives to teens without their parents' knowledge or consent, the problems related to adolescent sexual activity continue to worsen.

In 1981, I was pleased to join a bipartisan effort to develop an alternative program to the existing ineffective Federal policies for preventing teenage pregnancy. The result was the Adolescent Family Life Act, with goals directed toward providing services to pregnant teens to help them avoid abortion and to help them deal with other serious problems confronting them. In addition to providing coordinating services to adolescents, the law promotes increased parental involvement, encourages adoption as an alternative for unmarried adolescents who do not want to keep their babies, and provides for expanded research into the issues of adolescent pregnancy and the problems which both precede and follow in its wake.

Our distinguished colleague, Senator DENTON, deserves principal credit for authorizing what many of us believe is the only solution in sight to a serious national problem. Senator DENTON, and I, and the other Senators who have consponsored this program in the Labor and Human Resources Committee believe that this new approach will help solve the problems associated with teenage pregnancy.

As you know, Mr. President, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee has not completed final action on the reauthorization of title X family planning programs. Senator DENTON, as chairman of the Family and Human Services Subcommittee, has held two hearings on the reauthorization of family planning. Witnesses testified both on the importance of the program and on the need for necessary program changes to further the primary goal of providing appropriate family planning services to low-income women.

As always, I am willing, and in fact desire, to go to a legislative conference for as long as it takes if we can come to a firm resolution, and if we gain yardage for good public policy. Consistent with this, I will address at the conference on this bill the need for parental involvement in the delivery of family planning services to unmarried minors. I will also address the need for more specificity in abortion restrictions and also address the need for adoption and infertility services to be provided under title X. Certainly there are other critical issues concerning Federal family planning programs, all of which we should address consistent with the values of the citizens and families within the communities in which they serve.

I anticipate significant progress in the reauthorization of these three important Federal programs. Indeed, my desire is that all conferees at the negotiating table will share with me their willingness to exchange ideas on how best to improve these programs, doing so in the spirit of reaffirming the vitality of the American family and the sanctity of life.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments and agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. DENTON, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. DODD conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILL HELD AT DESK—H.R. 3697

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate receives from the House H.R. 3697, Fire Island National Seashore Amendments Act of 1983, it be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE DISCHARGED—H.R. 5540

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 5540, Coos, Lower Umpqua, and Siuslaw Restoration Act, and it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR KASSEBAUM

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I now ask the Chair to announce that we will resume the previously agreed to order of proceedings and that the Senator from Kansas be recognized.

Mr. BYRD. What was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Kansas is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

CENTRAL AMERICA

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to discuss current conditions in Central America. I, together with many of my colleagues, have shared concern and compassion regarding the developments in Central America over the last 4 to 6 years.

Some of the recent developments in Central America are positive and will, I believe, work to the benefit of the region and our interests there. I am particularly pleased with the efforts of President Duarte in El Salvador.

Since his election earlier this year, President Duarte has demonstrated a clear concern for human rights, and he has taken steps to improve the operation of the Salvadoran military and reduce civilian casualties. Among other small signs of hope is the recently initiated practice of evacuating badly wounded Salvadoran insurgents. This humanitarian gesture, arranged by the Catholic Church, deserves more attention than the world has given it.

Of course, much remains to be done in El Salvador before its insurgency, and the internal problems that feed it, can be fully controlled. But, El Salvador has begun the process of building democratic government and of seeking peace for its people.

Guatemala also held elections on July 1 as a first step toward democracy, and I was heartened by what appeared to nearly all observers to be free and open balloting there.

It is less clear to me what may be happening in Nicaragua at this time. Secretary of State Shultz has begun direct conversations with the Sandinista government, and this certainly deserves support and encouragement from all Americans. The Sandinista government also has indicated in the past few days that it will sign an interim peace agreement drafted by the Contadora nations.

However, these seemingly positive developments have been accompanied by other statements from Managua that raise concerns for me, and probably for many others in this Chamber. I am speaking specifically about statements by Sandinista leaders on their plans to obtain high-performance Mig jet fighters from the Soviet Union or other sources. This is not the first time the Nicaraguan leaders have indicated such plans and, in fact, they recently attempted to obtain L-39 jets from Libya—an attempt that fortunately was unsuccessful.

I will be blunt. The introduction of combat-capable jet aircraft into Nicaragua would be an unwarranted and unwise escalation of tensions in Central America. Such aircraft would, as the Sandinistas claim, provide an increased defensive capability. However, such aircraft also would provide Nicaragua with an increased offensive capability that alarms its neighbors and raises grave concerns here in the United States.

Our Government has made clear that the acquisition of these airplanes will not be tolerated and this policy is backed by broad, bipartisan support in Congress.

As one who strongly supports the Contadora peace efforts, including a halt on the escalating arms race in the region, I would urge the Sandinistas to weigh this matter carefully. I would urge them to exercise restraint, just as I have urged my own Government to show restraint in our involvement in Central America.

With Secretary Shultz still engaged in the search for peaceful solutions for the region, the introduction of jet aircraft into Nicaragua is the wrong signal from Managua. It also is the wrong response to the long and difficult Contadora effort.

I hope Sandinistas will reflect on this and that they will clearly understand the deep concern that exists in the United States. The American people will not stand for the introduction of combat-capable jet aircraft into Nicaragua.

There is a better way to resolve the problems of the region. I hope that the Sandinista government will take advantage of the openings which they have been given before they are closed.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

WHAT CAN AMERICA DO TO STOP NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, U.S. military intelligence experts flatly predict that within less than 20 years more than 30 nations will have nuclear arsenals. If that happens we can forget about a full life for most of our children and grandchildren. Nuclear war with all its terrible potentiality would become only a matter of time and the time could be measured in a very few years. Of course, our military intelligence experts may be wrong. It would not be the first time. Twenty years ago many experts freely predicted that nuclear weapons would spread rapidly. They said that by the middle 1980's—that is, by today—dozens of countries would have nuclear arsenals. But what happened? Between the middle sixties and today the number of nations joining the nuclear club barely increased at all. In fact, no nation that did not have nuclear arms 20 years ago will admit that it has a significant nuclear arsenal today. Israel and India probably have nuclear arms capability and two or three others may be on their way. But the world has been lucky and the experts have been wrong. Nuclear proliferation somehow stalled.

So why will not the expert error and the luck continue for another 20 years? Let us consider what forces are likely to determine whether or not nuclear weapons spread. And let us consider what we can do to prevent the fatal breakout. Why might nuclear arms begin to spread? First, nonnuclear countries may decide that the success of the nuclear armed countries, other than the two superpowers—especially France—shows that development of a nuclear arsenal offers the cheapest and easiest way to the international respect that only genuine military power can command. France offers a tempting example of what a nuclear arsenal can do for a country. It is no accident that Mitterand was the one world leader who recently visited Moscow, and directly face to face with Chernenko denounced the Soviet human rights atrocities—especially its treatment of Sakharov—and got away with it. Mitterand spoke with the authority of a head of state that has an independent nuclear arsenal, dwarfed by the Soviet Union, but capable of inflicting devastating ruin on Russia itself, if the Soviets attacked. So France offers an example of how nuclear power—even relatively modest nuclear power—conveys extraordinary respect for the leader with his finger on the button. Second, nuclear military power per unit comes much cheaper than conventional military power.

For the superpowers nuclear power constitutes more than 90 percent of their total destructive power. But the cost of the nuclear arsenal is only about 15 percent of the cost of the conventional arsenal. Of course, a nation must have more than a "Toonerville trolley" economy to build and sustain a nuclear force. But at least 70 nations have that economic capability now. Furthermore, the technology becomes constantly cheaper. Every year more and more nations qualify economically for the nuclear club. Third, to build a nuclear arsenal, the nation's leaders have to have the political leeway to move the nation down Nuclear Bomb Lane. Economically and scientifically powerful democracies like West Germany and Japan that must govern with the consent of a people that have suffered from misguided military leadership in the past are less likely to join the nuclear club than comparatively backward nations like Iran and Libya that are governed by dictators. Finally, the less a nation feels sheltered by an alliance and the more it feels threatened by its neighbors, the more likely it is to seek safety by building a nuclear arsenal.

Most attempts to slow or stop nuclear proliferation have begun and ended with international agreements like the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. The treaty and similar cooperative international actions to slow or stop the spread of nuclear weapons technology, equipment, and materials are absolutely critical. We should strongly support them. But such actions are not nearly enough. Far and away the greatest contributions the superpowers could make to stopping nuclear proliferation is to end the nuclear arms race. And the quintessential action Russia and America must take is to end nuclear weapons testing totally and forthwith. Since 1974, the superpowers have generally complied with an unratified agreement to limit nuclear weapons tests to underground explosives of less than 150 kilotons. But there have been more than 1,000 explosions by the United States and the Soviet Union, and those tests have been the essential force that has permitted the superpowers to "improve" this lethal technology so that weapons can move thousands of miles at blinding speed, and strike within a few feet of the target with the force of a million tons of TNT. Either power can literally blow up the world. But that's just the beginning. The technology zips ahead. Give the scientists of either or both superpowers a few more years and they will refine weapons they can hand over to any number of nations on the cheap and give them the power to blow the world off the map. By far the most important contribution this country can make to ending nuclear proliferation is to stop the arms race and especially to stop nuclear weapons testing now.

We should not overlook the contribution the superpowers can make to stopping the spread of nuclear weapons by providing sheltering alliances like NATO that both extend the nuclear umbrella protection and move the whole alliance toward peaceful negotiations with the other side. We should view NATO, for example, primarily as an organization to promote peace through ending the arms race; reducing weapons, especially nuclear weapons, on both sides; and above all doing everything we can to stop the spread of nuclear weapons.

TESTIMONY OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION IN SUPPORT OF THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on Monday, I discussed the testimony of Supreme Court Justice William Rhenquist, the conservative justice appointed by President Nixon, who testified on the Genocide Convention in 1970 in his capacity as Assistant Attorney General for the Nixon administration. As I pointed out, he testified firmly and clearly that the Genocide Convention was constitutional, that it posed no threat to Americans' right of free speech, that this or any treaty was on an equal footing with domestic law but that treaties and domestic law must bow before the Constitution and must always be consonant with the Constitution, no matter how the treaty was interpreted.

Today, I turn to the testimony presented before the Foreign Relations Committee by three representatives of the American Bar Association during the committee's 1981 hearings on the Genocide Convention.

As you know, Mr. President, the American Bar Association had initially taken a position in opposition to the Genocide Convention in 1950 and their testimony was given great weight by the Foreign Relations Committee at that time and the committee eventually decided not to report the treaty to the Senate in 1950.

In 1976, the American Bar Association reconsidered its opposition to the Genocide Convention and its House of Delegates overwhelmingly rescinded its past position and endorsed Senate ratification of the Genocide Convention. Since that time, the Bar Association's staff has worked very hard to inform the Members of the Senate and their staffs regarding the legal questions which had been raised regarding the Genocide Convention and why the Bar Association is convinced that these arguments—including ones that the ABA itself had raised in 1950—had not withstood the test of time.

Several of the concepts that were novel when the Genocide Convention was drafted have become accepted and customary practice and law, both domestically and internationally. Thus, the representatives of the American Bar Association were able to testify that there are now no unresolved legal questions regarding the Genocide Convention and that it deserves the overwhelming endorsement of the U.S. Senate.

For the benefit of my colleagues and their staffs, I ask unanimous consent that the testimony of the American Bar Association representatives be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PROXMIRE. These three men—Ambassador John Norton Moore, who is now a professor at the University of Virginia Law School; Thomas Buergenthal, dean of American University Law School; and, Bruno Bitker of Milwaukee, whose recent untimely death has deprived all of us of the wisdom of the Nation's leading expert on the Genocide Convention—presented the position of the American Bar Association eloquently and completely rebutted the old 1950's arguments that continue to be raised regarding the Genocide Convention. These arguments have long since deserved a burial and this testimony provides the overdue eulogy.

I urge my colleagues to carefully review this important testimony before the Senate begins its debate.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOHN NORTON MOORE, VICE CHAIRMAN, DIVISION OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW, SECTION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW; THOMAS BUERGENTHAL, CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS, SECTION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW; AND BRUNO BITKER, MEMBER, STANDING COMMITTEE ON WORLD ORDER UNDER LAW, AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee: My name is John Norton Moore, and I am honored to accept your invitation, on behalf of the American Bar Association President, to express the support of the 285,000-member ABA for immediate Senate advice and consent to ratification of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

I appear today as the Divisional Vice-Chairman for Public International Law of the ABA's Section of International Law. I am the Walter Brown Professor of Law at the University of Virginia and direct that university's Center for Law and National Security. Accompanying me are two distinguished international law scholars and recognized experts on the Genocide Convention.

The Honorable Thomas Buergenthal is Dean of the Washington College of Law of the American University, is a Judge on the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and serves as Chairman of the International Law Section's Committee on International Human Rights.

Mr. Bruno Bitker is a lawyer in Milwaukee, Wisconsin and is a member, and past chairman, of the Association's Standing Committee on World Order Under Law. Mr. Bitker is a leader, both within and without the Association, in the 32-year effort to ratify the Genocide Convention, and testified to that effect for the ABA before this Committee in 1977.

INTEREST OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

Mr. Chairman, the ABA has concerned itself with this treaty for nearly as long as the Convention has been before the Senate. Some three months after the Convention was transmitted by President Truman to the Senate on June 16, 1949, for its advice and consent, the Association's House of Delegates resolved to oppose ratification of the treaty "as submitted" by the President. For over 20 years thereafter, various Association entities continued to study the constitutional issues raised by the Convention; a resolution in support of ratification was defeated in February 1970 by a 130-126 vote of our House of Delegates.

Subsequently, various ABA groups reviewed the understandings and declaration which were the basis for this Committee's approval of the Convention by voice vote early in 1973. These three understandings and a declaration fully resolved the constitutional concerns of the ABA. Consequently, in February 1976, the Association's House of Delegates by voice vote approved a resolution favoring ratification with the understandings and declaration recommended by this Committee.

Ratification of the Genocide Convention is now one of the legislative priorities of the ABA President, and as such is one of a handful of legislative goals of the highest importance to the Association. As Mr. Bitker told this Committee in 1977. "[C]ertainly nothing is more basic to the obligation the United States assumed when it ratified the U.N. Charter, than to outlaw mass murder of a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such, whether committed in time of peace or war . . . [United States'] failure to ratify borders on constituting a national disgrace." We urge this Committee, the Senate and our Government to end this period of national disgrace by promptly ratifying this Convention.

As lawyers, we think the legal profession has a unique role to play in this ratification process. In a May 1977 address to the 20th anniversary meeting of the Inter-American Bar Foundation, then-ABA President William B. Spann observed that the Association's Code of Professional Responsibility "makes it quite clear that a lawyer should not regard himself simply as a functionary of the legal system, but as one who must defend and develop it." There is no more basic human right for which the legal system was established to defend, than the right of a human to live.

There are countries throughout the world whose governmental recognition of this right could be questioned. Mass slaughter of hundreds of thousands of citizens from identifiable ethnic or religious groups has repulsed the world in recent years. These events are evidence that genocide is a crime against mankind and one threatening the peace and security of the world, that it can only be prevented and punished through enforcement of recognized international law, that the United States should be the leading force in the world officially to condemn this crime. To state our opposition to genocide, but to refrain from actively seeking to prevent it, is merely to sanction its perpetuation.

In February 1976 the ABA's policy-making House of Delegates adopted the following resolution by voice vote:

Be It Resolved, That the American Bar Association favors the accession of the United States to the United Nations Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide with the following Understandings and Declaration which have been approved by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations:

1. That the U.S. Government understands and construes the words "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such" appearing in article II to mean the intent to destroy a national, ethnical, racial or religious group by the acts specified in article II in such a manner as to affect a substantial part of the group concerned.

2. That the U.S. Government understands and construes the words "mental harm" appearing in article II(b) of this Convention to mean permanent impairment of mental faculties.

3. That the U.S. Government understands and construes article VI of the Convention in accordance with the agreed language of the Report of the Legal Committee of the United Nations General Assembly that nothing in Article VI shall affect the right of any state to bring to trial before its own tribunals of any of its nationals for acts committed outside the state.

4. That the U.S. Government declares that it will not deposit its instrument of ratification until after the implementing legislation referred to in article V has been enacted.

Be It Further Resolved, That the President of the American Bar Association or his designee is hereby authorized to present the views of the Association as herein expressed before the appropriate committees of the Congress and other agencies of the Government of the United States.

The American Bar Asssociation, through adoption of this policy, agrees with the Departments of State and Justice that the Convention, along with the recommended understandings and declaration, pose no constitutional obstacles to ratification. Were this not the case, the first stated purpose of the ABA—". . . to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States . . ."—would prohibit us from supporting ratification, much less supporting it as strongly as we do.

WHAT THE CONVENTION PROVIDES—OBLIGATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Genocide Convention has established within the body of international law the international crime of mass destruction of people—of the whole or a substantial part of a national, ethnical, racial or religious group. Applicable in peacetime and during war, genocidal acts include intentional killing, causing of serious bodily or mental harm (understood by the United States to mean "permanent impairment of mental faculties"), inflicting living conditions so adverse as to intend to cause the group's destruction, imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group—thus destroying the group, and forcibly transferring children of the group to another group. Punishable acts include the actual commission of genocide, as well as conspiracy in, or direct and public incitement of, or attempt to commit, genocide, or complicity in committing genocide.

Persons charged with any of these offenses, whether public officials or private citizens, shall be tried in the state where the offense was alleged to have occurred or before an international tribunal. No such international tribunal or competent jurisdiction exists; if one were established, the United States Congress would have to approve submitting to the new court's jurisdiction. One of the understandings approved by the Foreign Relations Committee, and endorsed by the ABA, would make clear that U.S. citizens could be tried in U.S. courts for genocidal acts committed abroad. Furthermore, while the Convention provides that contracting parties shall grant extradition requests "in accordance with their laws and treaties in force" (Article VII), the Convention itself is not an extradition treaty. Since no current extradition treaties to which the United States is a party cover the crime of genocide, the United States would not be obligated to extradite U.S. citizens to a foreign country. Any future extradition treaty which might include the crime of genocide would, of course, be subject to the advise and consent power of the Senate. Each country would establish its own penalties to be imposed for convictions of the enumerated crimes.

A contracting party to the Convention may request appropriate U.N. entities to take action to assist in preventing or suppressing genocide (Article VIII). Also, the contracting parties will submit to the International Court of Justice disputes concerning the "interpretation, application or fulfillment" of the terms of the Convention (Article IX). This provision does not fall under the Connally amendment, by which the United States determines which cases are within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States, and thus outside the court's jurisdiction. However, provisions comparable to Article IX for resolution of disputes by the International Court of Justice are included in such treaties as the Japanese Peace Treaty and the Antarctic Treaty, to which the United States is a party.

Finally, the United States has declared that it will not deposit its instrument of ratification following Senate approval until after enactment by Congress of implementing legislation. Thus, the Genocide Convention is not a self-executing treaty, but rather one requiring the usual legislative approval of both Houses of Congress and the President.

Over the lengthy period of congressional debate over the meaning and possible adverse effects of the Convention's provisions, a number of recurring questions have been raised. For the benefit of the Committee, we attach to this statement nine of the most frequently asked, questions, and our responses. To summarize the attached responses, the ABA simply finds no responsible support for various constitutional questions raised against the Convention. To suggest that the protection against mass murder of a selected people is an improper subject of international concern, and thus without this nation's treaty power, is nonsense. Similarly, other legal issues concerning, for instance, the effect of voluntary birth control, the acts of soldiers in wartime and the "incitement" language of Article III all have long been resolved in the context of U.S. domestic law or international law.

The fact that these legal issues are without merit is perhaps best substantiated by the testimony before this Committee in 1970 by then-Assistant Attorney General William H. Rehnquist:

"In 1950 some of the questions concerning Federal jurisdiction and the treaty power were considered somewhat novel. However, developments in the intervening years—the extensive use of the treaty power and the growth of Federal criminal jurisdiction—have, it seems, illuminated both these areas to the point where I believe I can safely say that the questions before the Committee and the Senate are more matters of policy than questions of legal power. Other witnesses in support of this treaty have, I believe, made this clear."

THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION SHOULD BE RATIFIED NOW

The United States should ratify the Genocide Convention immediately because such an act would be a timely expression of this nation's unalterable commitment to the rule of law in international affairs, because it would strengthen our hand in the current conduct of foreign relations with allies and adversaries alike, and because it would place us in the company of 89 other nations—where we should have been long ago—in expressing our collective national repugnance to mass acts of murder of unspeakable proportions.

As a member nation of the United Nations, and as a signatory to the Helsinki Accords, among other agreements, the United States has demonstrated its leadership in seeking to bring more order to the peaceful relations among nations. The essence of this commitment is our devotion to an ordered existence governed by universally accepted rules and procedures—the rule of law. Since our own freedoms are assured through adherence to the rule of law—a concept by no means universally accepted throughout the world—our sovereignty is that much more enhanced through our efforts to expand the primary of the rule of law in our relations with other nations. Ratification of the Genocide Convention furthers this cause.

It is clear to most observers that the Soviet Union and other nations with less regard for the type of freedoms we take for granted pose the most serious threat to our national interests. As Dean Buergenthal recently stated, the threat of the Soviet Union:

"Is not only military or subversive, it is also ideological and it must therefore be confronted on the ideological level as well. . . . A sound human rights policy provides the U.S. with an ideology that distinguishes us most clearly from the Soviet Union and seriously undercuts the ideological appeal of Communism."

However, our ideological hand is not strong in dealing with the Soviets when our criticism of their treatment of religious or ethnic groups prompts the question of why the United States has not ratified the Genocide Convention. In the terminology of legal equity, ratification of the Convention would bring us to the International negotiating table with "clean hands."

Finally, it is important to remember that this treaty is hardly a novel idea. It has been in force for some 30 years and is the law in the majority of the world. The United States was a leading participant in drafting the treaty and in advocating its importance. The crime of genocide surely is the most difficult for civilized people to comprehend, and the most shocking to the human conscience. The extent to which most of the rest of the world has signaled its horror of this crime by ratifying the Convention is both a measure of this country's humiliation at not being a signatory, and the strongest reason why ratification should wait no longer.

Mr. Chairman, we thank you for this opportunity to again urge ratification of this Convention, and will be pleased to respond to your questions.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS CONCERNING THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Question 1. Doesn't the Convention allow the United Nations to investigate United States domestic officials and thus subject our Government to irresponsible charges of genocide in the World Forum?

Answer. Article VIII which empowers a contracting party to call upon the competent organs of the United Nations "to take such action under the Charter . . . as they consider appropriate for the powers of the United Nations. Genocide, involving mass murder on a broad scale, would violate not only the human rights provisions of the UN Charter but would normally involve a threat to the peace and therefore would clearly be within the powers of the UN to discuss. It need also be noted that article 2(7) of the UN Charter contains a proscription against intervention in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state. . . ."

The argument that ratification of the Convention would subject the United States to irresponsible charges of genocide is without foundation. Ratification would not alter the present situation to our disadvantage. Spurious propaganda charges alleging genocide can be made by our enemies whether or not the United States is a party to the Convention. If anything, ratification would improve our position to rebut spurious charges by subjecting our behavior to a precise legal definition of genocide. Further, our failure to ratify in fact weakens the effectiveness of our replies.

Question 2. Isn't it true that the Genocide Convention would allow United States POW's to be charged with genocide by enemy nations?

Answer. An inference such as this overlooks the simple reality that such a charge may be made by the authorities of a state involved in a conflict with the United States with or without the Genocide Convention. There is nothing in the Genocide Convention that would provide warrant for charges by an enemy nation that our POW's are guilty of genocide. The existence of the Genocide Convention, and more importantly the ratification or rejection of the Convention by the United States, would have little effect on the treatment of American POW's. This was clear in the cases of American POW's held by North Vietnam (where neither state was party to the Convention). Their peril will not be increased by approval of the Convention while peril may be avoided for tens of millions by ratification of the Convention.

Question 3. Wouldn't the Convention change the constitutional structure of the United States in that the United States lacks the constitutional power to make treaties in the human rights field because treatment by a state of its own nationals is a domestic matter and not properly the subject of an international agreement?

Answer. In the past, the power of the United States under the Constitution to make treaties in the human rights field has been questioned on the grounds that the treatment by a state of its nationals is a matter of domestic jurisdiction. This was one of the points raised in opposition to the Genocide Convention by the American Bar Association. However, the special Committee of Lawyers of the President's Commission for the Observance of Human Rights Year 1968 concluded after a survey of the constitutional issues involved and of the past treaty making practice of the United States that, "Treaties which deal with the rights of individuals within their own countries as a matter of international concern may be a proper exercise of the treaty-making power of the United States . . ."

The Supreme Court declared in Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258, 267 (1890), that the treaty-making power may be exercised on any matter "which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country". The United States is a party to numerous international agreements relating to the activities of its own citizens within the United States because those treaties deal with matters appropriate for international negotiation. Examples include treaties on narcotics, public health and nature conservation, and the Supplementary Convention on Slavery.

In the words of the Special Committee of Lawyers, of which retired Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark was chairman: "It may seem almost anachronistic that this question continues to be raised." This concern needs to be determined objectively in the light of the current interests of the United States in an interdependent world and contemporary concepts of international law—not on the basis of notions that may have been appropriate in a different historical time. In today's world the massive destruction of a racial, religious or national group in one country has an immediate impact on members of this group in other countries, stimulates demand for intervention and adversely affects international relations. As said by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee: "on both moral and practical grounds, the Commission of genocide, involving as it must mass action, cannot help but be of concern to the community of nations".

Question 4. Isn't it true that the Genocide Convention would alter the balance of authority between the State and Federal government?

Answer. The Constitution, Article I, Section 8, specifically gives Congress the power to "define and punish . . . offenses against the law of Nations". The act of genocide is almost universally recognized in treaties, international custom, and the acts of international organizations as an offense against the law of nations. It is thus clearly within the power of Congress to outlaw the crime of genocide. Ratification of the genocide convention will add no powers to those the Federal Government already possesses.

Question 5. Wouldn't birth control offered on a voluntary basis be subject to attack as genocide?

Answer. This fear has no foundation. None of the five acts in the Convention definition is genocide unless "committed with intent to destroy in whole or in part" one of the named group as such. Thus, basic to any charge of genocide is the element of intent. To avoid any misconceptions the United States ratification would be accompanied by an understanding that the intent required by the Convention be the intent to destroy one of the named groups "in such a manner as to affect a substantial part of the group concerned".

Question 6. Couldn't the Convention result in the bringing of United States citizens to arrest and trial in foreign areas on charges of genocide?

Answer. The Convention does impose an obligation on the State in whose territory acts of genocide had been committed to try all persons charged with committing genocide within that State. However, it is clear from the Convention's negotiating history that the Convention does not bar another State from trying before its own tribunals its nationals who had committed such acts outside the State. This theory of concurrent jurisdiction—jurisdiction based on the site of the alleged offense and jurisdiction based on the nationality of the offender—has been thoroughly explored. The United States government, however, made it clear to the other contracting parties that it intends to construe the Convention so as to permit it to try its own nationals for punishable genocidal acts whether committed at home or abroad. This is recorded in the United States understanding that the United States Government "understands and construes Article VI . . . that nothing in Article VI shall affect the right of any State to bring to trial before its own tribunals any of its nationals for acts committed outside the State".

Question 7. Doesn't the Convention open the possibility that United States citizens can be extradited and subject to trial for genocide before a foreign tribunal without constitutional protection and benefits?

Answer. Ratification of the Convention would merely permit the adding on of one or more crimes—genocide—to the many crimes for which American citizens may already be extradited under existing extradition treaties. The Convention is not itself and extradition treaty. Neither United States law nor any of the U.S. extradition treaties at present cover genocide. Under the Convention extradition would take place only in accordance with laws and treaties in force. In any case, the United States does not grant extraction unless a prima facie case is established against the accused and unless the accused will be afforded by the requesting state the due process required by our Constitution. Such a treaty could be negotiated in the future with or without the Genocide Convention but it would need to be brought before the Senate for approval.

Question 8. Isn't it true that ratification of the Convention would subject United States citizens to trial before international penal tribunals?

Answer. No. It is unforunate draftsmanship that Article VI of the Convention provides persons charged with genocide shall be tried "by such international tribunal as may have jurisdiction . . ." No such international tribunal presently exists and there is no negotiation to create one. If any such tribunal were established it would not have jurisdiction over United States nationals unless the United States agreed to such jurisdiction either in the form of the Senate's advice and consent to ratification of a treaty or by statute expressing its consent.

Question 9. Doesn't the provision in the Convention for settlement of disputes by the International Court of Justice unreasonably limit United States sovereignty?

Answer. The provision in the Convention is not a new one in the United States practice. The United States has become a party to many international agreements providing for reference to the International Court of Justice of disputes arising under such agreements, including the Japanese Peace Treaty, the Antarctic Treaty and the Statute of the International Atomic Energy Agency. This provision for the settlement of disputes over the interpretation of the Genocide Convention does not unreasonably limit our sovereignty.

A number of countries, notably the communist countries, have entered reservations to their ratifications stating that they do not accept compulsory reference to the International Court of Justice. The United States is thus placed in a position to invoke those countries reservations in its own behalf to defeat the court's jurisdiction in cases brought under the Convention by countries which have made such a reservation. Our interests are better served by having any charges of genocide against us considered in a less politically motivated forum like the International Court of Justice.

STATEMENT OF BRUNO V. BITKER, CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS, SECTION ON INTERNATIONAL LAW, AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee: My name is Bruno Bitker and I am chairman of the American Association's Committee on International Human Rights of the Section on International Law. I am honored to appear before you today on behalf of the American Bar Association to urge the Senate to give its advice and consent to ratification of the Genocide Convention. I have appeared before this Committee at prior hearings, conveying the support of a variety of organizations. I am, however, especially delighted to do so this time on behalf of the ABA, which represents the organized bar of this country. The American Bar Association, as this Committee is aware, did not easily or quickly arrive at its endorsement of the Genocide Convention. In fact, in 1949, prior to the hearings conducted by this Committee, it had decided not to support ratification because the treaty "involves important constitutional questions . . ." not satisfactorily resolved. Subsequently, in 1970, following President Nixon's request to the Senate to act on the Genocide Convention, the ABA again considered the question. But by a divided vote of 130 to 126 in the House of Delegates, it declined to change its earlier stand. Opponents of ratification had frequently cited the ABA position as justifying U.S. inaction. However, upon further study and consideration, in February 1976, the ABA reversed its position and by an overwhelming vote recommended the ratification of the Convention. A copy of that recommendation and the supporting report is filed with this statement.

Though considerable attention was given to this Convention by the bar association before it decided to support it, it does not match the extensive and thorough analysis of every provision accorded to it by this Committee since President Truman, on June 16, 1949, sought the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification. The published hearings of the subcommittee held in January and February, 1950, contain about everything that could be said on the subject, pro and con. The opposition feared that it might undermine our constitutional structure. On the other hand, the favorable testimony was so meaty, it would be difficult to single out specific references. However, if any Senator or staff member wishes to read the supporting testimony of just one witness, I would suggest the remarkable presentation by Philip B. Perlman, Solicitor General of the United States (p. 22, et seq.).

On May 23, 1950, the subcommittee reported out the Convention favorably with one declaration and four understandings (summarized in "Legislative History of the Committee on Foreign Relations," S. Doc. No. 247, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. at p. 27, 1950). The full committee, however, withheld action and for almost two decades it remained in the Senate's deep freeze. Today it is eligible for a place in the "Guinness Book of World Records" as being the oldest treaty pending before the Senate (U.S. Senate, Legislative Calendar, 95th Congress, March 31, 1977).

Although the Senate had taken no further action following the 1950 hearings, in July, 1963, President Kennedy sent to the Senate three human rights treaties (Political Rights of Women, Abolition of Forced Labor, and a Supplementary Slavery Convention). In the course of the hearings on these conventions in 1967, action on the Genocide Convention was urged. However, no action was taken on it.

In 1968, the year designated by the United Nations as Human Rights Year in honor of the 20th anniversary of the adoption of the International Declaration of Human Rights, the President created a President's Commission for the Observance of Human Rights Year. The Commission urged ratification of the Convention. More particularly, it created a special committee of lawyers headed by Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark (retired), which included some of the most prominent lawyers in the country. That committee, on which I was privileged to serve, issued a report on the treaty-making power of the United States in human rights matters. Justice Clark, in his letter of transmittal, said in part: . . . I would like to reiterate here, however, our finding, after a thorough review of judicial, congressional and diplomatic precedents, that human rights are matters of international concern; and that the President, with the United States concurring, may, on behalf of the United States, under the treaty power of the Constitution, ratify or adhere to any international human rights convention that does not contravene a specific Constitutional prohibition.

In its conclusion, the report said:

. . . It may seem almost anachronistic that this question continues to be raised. It is nearly a quarter of a century since this country used the treaty power to become a party to the U.N. Charter, One of those basic purposes is the promotion of human rights for all. The list of parties to the various human rights treaties proposed by the U.N. has become longer each year. In each of the last two years the U.S. Senate has approved a human rights treaty without a single dissenting vote. In December, 1968, the Chief Justice of the United States noted that we as a nation should have been the first to ratify the Genocide Convention and the Race Discrimination Convention. And yet the suggestion persists that this Nation is constitutionally impotent to do what we and the rest of the world have, in fact, been doing.

The report will be of value to members of this Committee and to the staff that drafts your report, and because it is now out of print, I ask consent to file my copy as a part of the record of these hearings.

Two other reports prepared by entities of the American Bar Association in support of ratification appear in the printed hearings of the subcommittee held March 10, 1971. One, at page 147, is the report of the ABA Section on Individual Rights and Responsibilities and the other, at page 196, is the report of the ABA Standing Committee on World Order Under Law. I participated in the drafting of the several reports to which I have alluded in this statement.

In February, 1970, President Nixon reminded the Senate that the Convention continued to be unfinished business and urged prompt action. Thereafter, new hearings were held in April and May, 1970, and again in March, 1971. The Committee reported out the Convention favorably on December 8, 1970, on May 4, 1971, on March 6, 1973 and again on April 29, 1976.

There is no better or more succinct review of the status of the Convention than as set forth in the Committee's 1976 report. That report includes three understandings and one declaration, which are also included in the ABA's resolution of approval. Attached to the Committee's report is the implementing legislation proposed in accordance with Article V of the Convention. I see no problem concerning this legislation and I understand none has been suggested.

Everything that can be said on the constitutional question has been fully discussed in all these hearings and Committee reports. To save time and to avoid unnecessary repetition, I am not repeating these arguments. It is difficult to take seriously any basic constitutional objection to the Convention. It is conceivable, though it has not been urged, that there are public policy objections to ratification. But it would be hiding behind a false front to ratify on spurious constitutional grounds.

As noted in the Committee's last report, no fewer than 82 members of the United Nations (perhaps 83 depending on how China's accession is viewed) have become parties to the Convention. Although the United States was a leader in drafting and securing its adoption in the United States in 1948, it is the outstanding laggard in ratifying it. Its failure to ratify borders on constituting a national disgrace. As the late Chief Justice Earl Warren said in December, 1968, "We as a nation should have been the first to ratify the Genocide Convention . . . Instead we may well be the last. . . ."

Since the Committee's 1976 report, a new President of the United States has come into office, President Carter has followed all of his predecessors from Truman through Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, and Ford in support of America's furthering the cause of international human rights, including ratifying the Genocide Convention. As President Carter stated on March 17th to the United Nations: "Ours is a commitment, and not just a politial posture . . . To demonstrate this commitment . . . I will work closely with our Congress in seeking to support ratification . . . of the United Nations Genocide Convention."

The legal obligation with respect to human rights is thus noted by Phillip C. Jessup, former member of the International Court of Justice:

"It is already law at least for members of the United Nations, that respect for human dignity and fundamental human rights is obligatory. The duty is imposed by the Charter, a treaty to which they are parties."

Certainly nothing is more basic to this obligation which the United States assumed when it ratified the U.N. Charter, than to outlaw mass murder of a national, ethnic, racial, or religious group, as such, whether committed in time of peace or war.

I have especially referred in this statement to the endless hearings through which this Committee has sat to emphasize the need to fish or cut bait. The Committee has certainly exhibited great courtesy as well as extreme patience over the years in allowing anyone and everyone to express his or her views on the subject. As it said in 1976, "further hearings on the treaty were not warranted in view of the voluminous record made in hearings in 1950, 1970 and 1971." There appears no provision in the Convention that would support a successful attack on constitutional grounds. No objections asserted on a legal basis justifies delaying ratification. Any conceivable uncertainty as to a few phrases has been cured by the understandings. If there are justifiable reasons of national policy for not ratifying, they have not been advanced. The one new fact to be noted since the last hearing is the favorable action of the American Bar Association. And that has now been recorded.

Each time the Committee has acted it has reported the Convention favorably. But each time it has reached the Senate floor, an actual or threatened filibuster has prevented the Senate from voting to support a commitment we made on December 9, 1948, when we approved the treaty in the United Nations. It is already past the time to sign on the dotted line.

The United States is now reestablishing its moral leadership in the world. If it now ratifies this Convention, it would be a clear demonstration that it is faithful to its pledge under the U.N. Charter. It would also be acting in its own best national interest.

[Resolution adopted by House of Delegates, American Bar Association, Feb. 17, 1976, and the Supporting Report]

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION—SECTION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

RECOMMENDATION

The Section of International Law recommends adoption of the following resolutions:

Be it resolved, that the American Bar Association favors the accession of the United States to the United Nations Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide with the following Understandings and Declaration which have been approved by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations:

1. That the U.S. Government understands and construes the words "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national ethnical, racial or religious group as such" appearing in article II to mean the intent to destroy a national, ethnical, racial or religious group by the acts specified in article II in such manner as to effect a substantial part of the group concerned.

2. That the U.S. Government understands and construes the words "mental harm" appearing in article II(b) of this Convention to mean permanent impairment of mental faculties.

3. That the U.S. Government understands and construes article VI of the Convention in accordance with the agreed language of the Report of the Legal Committee of the United Nations General Assembly that nothing in Article VI shall affect the right of any state to bring to trial before its own tribunals any of its nationals for acts committed outside the state.

4. That the U.S. Government declares that it will not deposit its instrument of ratification until after the implementing legislation referred to in article V has been enacted.

Be it further resolved that the President of the American Bar Association or his designee is hereby authorized to present the views of the Association as herein expressed before the appropriate committees of the Congress and other agencies of the Government of the United States.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS OF THE CONVENTION

Article I

Genocide is a crime under international law, whether committed during peace or war.

The contracting parties undertake to prevent and punish such a crime.

Article II

Acts constituting Genocide are those committed "with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such" by:

(a) "Killing members of the group";

(b) "Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group";

(c) "Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part";

(d) "Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group";

(e) "Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group".

Article III

Acts which are punishable are:

(a) Genocide,

(b) Conspiracy to commit Genocide,

(c) Direct and public incitement to commit Genocide,

(d) Attempt to commit Genocide,

(e) Complicity in Genocide.

Article IV

Persons committing Genocide shall be punished, whether constitutionally responsible rulers, public officials or private individuals.

Article V

The contracting parties shall enact the necessary implementing legislation to enforce provisions of the Convention.

Article VI

Persons charged with a violation of the Convention are to be tried by a competent tribunal in the state where the act was committed or by an international penal tribunal having jurisdiction of the parties.

Article VII

For the purposes of extradition Genocide is not to be considered a political crime. Extradition shall be granted by the contracting parties in accordance to their laws and treaties in force.

Article VIII

Any contracting party may call upon the competent organ of the United Nations for action where appropriate to carry out the purport of the Convention.

Article IX

Disputes relating to "interpretation, application or fulfillment" of provisions of the Convention including those relating to the responsibility of a state for Genocide or other acts punishable by the Convention shall be submitted to the International Court of Justice at the request of the disputing parties.

Article X to XIX are procedural in nature.

DISCUSSION

The purpose of the Convention is to make Genocide an international crime whether committed during peace or war. It seeks to prevent and punish when it occurs the destruction, in whole or in part, of a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such. The Convention defines Genocide, specifies the acts which constitute Genocide, sets forth the obligations of the parties, the place of trial of the accused, and provides for submission of disputes relating to interpretation, application or fulfillment to the International Court of Justice.

The first Understanding makes it clear that where the words "intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such" are used in the definition of the crime of Genocide that it means an intent to destroy by such acts in such a way as to affect a "substantial" part of the group concerned.

The second Understanding states that where the word "mental harm" is used to define a punishable act, it means a "permanent impairment of mental facilities." It does not include violent expressions or prejudice against individual members of groups. It also would discourage any frivolous allegations of mental harm.

The third Understanding is to take care of the situation where a national of the United States committed an act outside of the state. Pursuant to this understanding the U.S. will have the right to bring to trial before its own tribunals any of its nationals for acts committed. There has been considerable discussion regarding the Convention from the viewpoint of extradition. It should be understood that the Convention itself is not an extradition treaty.

The Convention is not self-executing but requires necessary implementing legislation. The recommended Declaration makes it clear that we must enact necessary federal legislation pursuant to our constitutional procedure prior to depositing our instrument of ratification.

Attached hereto as Appendix A is a copy of Senate Executive Report 93-5, 93rd Cong. 1st Sess., (1973). This Report lists the pertient provisions of the Convention and gives an interpretation of each provision based upon the testimony offered at the earlier hearings. A copy of the Convention will also be made available to any interested party.

CONCLUSION

Eighty-two nations to-date have ratified and/or acceded to the Genocide Convention. The world community has, therefore, defined Genocide as "a crime against the laws of nations". The United States is a party to other treaties that define and establish an international crime. (The Geneva Conventions On Protection Of War Victims, 1949, TIAS 3362-3365; The Conventions For The Regulation of Whaling, 1935, TS 880, 1946, TIAS 1849; the International Convention for the Prevention of the Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, TIAS 4900 and the Single Convention On Narcotic Drugs, 1961, TIAS 6298.) Statement made in the past and raised in the Senate and the ABA House of Delegates are no longer pertinent. The passage of time has confirmed that Genocide is a matter of "international concern" which should be regulated as an international crime. Acceding to the Convention at this time is a positive step in the national interest of our country. The American Bar Association should come forward and place on record its positive support.

This resolution was overwhelmingly approved by the Council of the Section of International Law at its Mid-Winter Meeting on December 5-7, 1975.

Respectively submitted,

RICHARD P. BROWN, Jr.,
Chairman, Section of International Law.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JUDGE THOMAS BUERGENTHAL

Mr. Chairman: My name is Thomas Buergenthal. I am the Chairman of the Human Rights Committee of the International Law Section of the American Bar Association. I am also the Dean of The American University Law School and the only American judge on the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Chairman, it is a great honor for me to appear before your Committee as the representative of the ABA and to support United States ratification of the Genocide Convention. As an international lawyer, as a naturalized U.S. citizen, and as a survivor of the Auschwitz concentration camp, I am profoundly moved to have this opportunity to represent the ABA in urging U.S. ratification of a treaty that symbolizes mankind's revulsion against and rejection of the ideology that made the Holocaust possible and in which I lost all but one member of my immediate family. There are not many countries in the world where a person with my background would be accorded the privilege to represent the organized bar before a legislative body on an issue of such importance or, for that matter, on any issue. It is, therefore, a source of considerable sadness for me that this great country of ours, which is committed to and lives by the very ideals that provide the strongest bulwark against genocide should, 36 years after World War II, still not have ratified the Genocide Convention.

Today, even without the Genocide Convention, international law outlaws genocide—that conclusion is no longer open to doubt. The Convention thus merely codifies what general international law prohibits.

Although the United States would therefore not be assuming any additional substantial legal obligations it does not already have, U.S. ratification of the Genocide Convention would be an act of great symbolic importance because it would associate the United States with the international community's unequivocal rejection of genocide and the totalitarian ideologies, whether of the right or of the left, that produce genocide.

The United States cannot hope to play a leading role in opposing totalitarianism and in promoting individual liberties in the world while refusing, at the same time, to associate itself with those international instruments in which the international community proclaims its allegiance to the very principles the United States advocates.

The fact that many of the 90 governments that have ratified the Genocide Convention are among the most brutal violators of human rights does not justify our failure to ratify this treaty. Totalitarian regimes sign human rights treaties because that makes for good propaganda, but it is good propaganda precisely because it capitalizes on the universality of mankind's yearning for human rights, which is the strongest enemy of totalitarianism. The United States has to associate itself not only in fact but also symbolically with this yearning. The world's greatest democracy needs to identify itself with mankind's aspirations to hold all governments to a code of conduct that outlaws genocide. Those who fight for democracy and human dignity, whether it be in the Soviet Union, in Poland, in Cambodia, in Afghanistan, need to know, in order to carry on their struggle, that they are not alone, that their struggle is not hopeless, and that at least some governments which ratify human rights treaties are committed to the principles these treaties proclaim.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to believe that our strongest foreign policy asset is this country's commitment to individual freedom and democracy. When we, in our foreign dealings, are true to these ideals, we promote our own foreign policy interests to the utmost, putting world Communism on the defensive Nothing exposes the evil and the weakness of the Communist system more effectively than acts by the United States which demonstrate that this country shares mankind's aspirations for freedom and human dignity which Communism so brutally suppresses. U.S. ratification of the Genocide Convention, by proclaiming this country's solemn commitment to the eradication of genocide, would be just such a demonstration.

In common with the membership of the ABA, I am totally opposed to U.S. ratification of any treaty that would violate our Constitution. If I thought that the Genocide Convention, in the form in which it is presented for ratification, raised serious constitutional law issues. I would oppose its ratification and so, quite obviously, would the ABA. But this is not the case. Whether or not the United States should ratify the Convention is a policy decision that presents no constitutional law obstacles. It is a decision that can and should therefore be made by asking whether ratification would advance U.S. foreign policy interests. I believe that the answer to this question is yes, and that is why I hope very much that your Committee, Mr. Chairman, and the Senate as a whole will opt for ratification of the Convention. It symbolizes mankind's aspirations for a better world. The American people cannot but benefit from identifying themselves with a world-wide movement that is sustained by these aspirations. These aspirations are our strongest weapon in the struggle against Communist expansionism and totalitarian oppression.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

LOSERS IN THE WAR AGAINST DRUG ABUSE?

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, some people think we are losing the war against drugs.

In a recent article featured in the Miami Herald, certain officials in our Government express the view that, despite an unprecedented Federal anti-drug effort, major drug seizures and numerous indictments, we are losing in our hard-fought battle against drug abuse.

It is claimed in this article that we are losing this war because of the following: The amount of high-quality cocaine in the United States is at an all-time high; the wholesale price of cocaine is not one-third of what it was 2 years ago; as few as 3 percent of drug flights last year resulted in aircraft seizures; the greater availability and cheaper price of cocaine has turned it from a drug for the affluent into a street drug; emergency room admissions for severe cocaine reactions are more than double what they were 2 years ago; and domestic marijuana production is up sharply.

Mr. President, the pessimism expressed in this article can be translated into positive action. The U.S. Government officials who have provided us with this bad news are not telling us to stop our efforts; on the contrary, they are saying we must keep trying, and try even harder. In this article, these officials plead with the public to help in dealing with the problem of drug abuse. They discuss the need for the American people to wake up and recognize the health and social dangers of drugs; the need to develop a social consciousness regarding the drug menace. All existing law enforcement programs, it is claimed in this article, have no effect on the user. The public must be educated to the horrors of drug abuse, so that the demand for drugs will stop.

These most recent figures from the front in the war on drugs point out how we should focus our attack on stopping the drug menace at its source. This method of trying to curb drug abuse remains the most effective, and we must continue our efforts in encouraging drug-producing nations to eradicate their crops. And therein lies the good news. We are, more and more, seeing nations like Colombia, Burma, Panama, and Pakistan attempting to curb their drug production by raiding drug bases in their territory, by destroying drug processing plants, and by arresting drug warlords. By supporting these countries in their efforts, we can help rid our own Nation of the horrors of drug abuse.

I respectfully request that the article entitled, "U.S. Losing Key Drug-War Battles," In the Miami Herald, dated May 28, 1984, be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. LOSING KEY DRUG-WAR BATTLES—OFFICIALS CITE BUMPER CROP OF POT, COCAINE 'GLUT,' FAILURE TO STOP FLIGHTS

(By George Stein)

Despite an unprecedented federal anti-narcotics effort, spectacular drug seizures, and major indictments, unmistakable signs indicate that the Reagan administration's high-profile war against drugs is being lost.

The amount of high-quality cocaine reaching the United States is apparently at an all time high. Federal agencies are raising their figures on cocaine importation sharply upward.

A tremendous glut, said retired Admiral Daniel Murphy, chief of staff for Vice President George Bush and Washington coordinator of the administration's anti-drug efforts.

The wholesale price of cocaine now is one-third to one-fourth what it was two years ago when enhanced federal anti-drug efforts began, according to federal and local drug officials.

U.S. Customs estimates on smuggling indicate that as few as 3 percent of drug flights into the U.S. in 1983 resulted in aircraft seizures.

Two ranking federal officials say the chances of flying a private plane into South Florida undetected remain good—despite the highest concentration of drug radar and intercept aircraft in the country.

The increased availability of purer, cheaper cocaine across the nation has been accompanied by an increase in its popularity among the young and the less affluent, say federal officials and drug rehabilitation counselors—despite education efforts that have included first lady Nancy Reagan and more recently, rock superstar Michael Jackson.

Emergency room admissions for severe cocaine reactions are more than double what they were two years ago nationally. They tripled in the South Florida metropolitan area, which now accounts for 11 percent of the nation's emergency admissions for cocaine reactions. Most of the local and increased crime in the last year, as the price of cocaine tumbled.

Domestic marijuana production is up sharply, offsetting increased seizures on the high seas. Growers who had been suffering hard times when the increased federal effort began, now are doing well financially, say marijuana industry observers. They value the 1983 harvest at $14 billion and say that domestic dope now accounts for close to half of the total consumed.

Gone are the optimistic days of 1982, at the inception of the presidential drugs task force, when Murphy could say that the flow of drugs had been "cut to a trickle."

Now, Murphy says, "I don't see where we are winning the war on cocaine."

On marijuana: "The domestic supply increase is troublesome." says Rear Adm. Donald "Deese" Thompson, Miami task force coordinator. "We have not reduced the flow of drugs into South Florida to a trickle."

There are a lot more bad guys than good guys," said William Mason, assistant regional Customs commissioner for enforcement.

"We can't be everywhere at once." Thompson and Mason are the two federal officials who say that a private airplane with a knowledgeable pilot stands a good chance of flying to South Florida undetected. "There is no steel net over South Florida," said Mason.

We are not winning, said Authur Nehrbass, commander of the Metro-Dade Organized Crime Bureau.

"We are losing. There is no question about that. We are losing big," said U.S. Rep. Glenn English, D., Okla. English has investigated the administration's drug-fighting efforts for two years as chairman of the House Subcommittee on Government Information, Justice and Agriculture. "It's the old supply and demand," Sgt. John Dalton of the Miami Police vice and narcotics unit said, with an audible sigh. "There are just so many people who do drugs."

The pessimistic assessments have been accompanied by pleas from frustrated law enforcement officials that the public do something about the problem.

"I'm not trying to con anyone," said task force chief Thompson, "It would become discouraging—if you weren't optimistic that the American people are going to wake up soon and recognize the health and social dangers. There has got to be a social consciousness developed."

We have to educate the public," said Mason.

INTERAGENCY SQUABBLING

And along with the bad news has come a vocal return to the interagency squabbling and turf battles that characterized—and, some say, hampered—drug enforcement for years.

Francis M. Mullen Jr., head of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, wrote a scathing memo in January to William French Smith, U.S. attorney general, criticizing the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System.

A "liability," Mullen called the interdiction program, the administration's latest effort to coordinate attempts to stop drugs at the border. Its "alleged grandiose accomplishments" will "become this administration's Achilles' heel for drug enforcement," Mullen wrote.

Administration officials scrambled to smooth things over after details of the memo leaked out on May 14.

Damage control was also on the agenda a day later in South Florida after local drug enforcement officials complained to a House subcommittee that they were shut out of task force operations. Better coordination was promised.

BATTLE WITHOUT BULLETS

Predictably, the charges have entered the political arena: Internal strife among the lawmen has reduced the drug war to a battle without bullets, and U.S. Attorney General Smith is "not in touch," U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D., Ariz., charged Friday. Smith retorted, "I do know what is going on. There is a lot of shooting . . . most effective shooting."

Memos, hearings, bureaucrats, radar, airplanes and boats notwithstanding, the reality of the cocaine glut has hit hardest on the streets where it is sold and in the bodies of those who use it.

"It's all over the place," said Miami police Sgt. Mike Ahearn, who heads a special task force on street vice and narcotics.

"Cocaine, an elite drug a few years back, is now a street drug," said John Kross, program director of the rehabilitation program at Here's Help.

"The availability was right down the street," said "Jerry," a cocaine abuser who entered Village South, a Miami drug rehabilitation program, two weeks ago. "It's much easier now."

The pattern is national, said Mall Gisson, president of Village South and past president of Therapeutic Communities of America, an organization for drug rehabilitation programs.

INCREASED POPULARITY

Rehab directors across the country met in Detroit May 7-9 and reported a sharp increase in cocaine availability, abuse and popularity, Gisson said.

Of the increased law enforcement programs, he said: "All of their efforts have had absolutely no effect on the user. If they have had any effect, show me where."

John Huttner, intake supervisor at Village South, said, "It used to be rare to find a 13-year-old involved in anything but marijuana. Now it's rare to find an adolescent who is just using marijuana. They are finding the money for cocaine."

Street prices, reported Huttner, now are as low as $60 a gram for cocaine that is for purer than the coke that was available a year ago, when prices were $100 a gram. On the wholesale level, prices vary between $16,000 and $20,000 for a kilogram (2.2 pounds) of refined cocaine, compared with $60,000 per kilo two years ago.

And with the lower prices and increased purity has come a sharp increase in severe cocaine reactions.

EMERGENCY ROOMS

Hospital officials reported 889 emergency room admissions for cocaine reactions in 27 metropolitan areas during the first quarter of 1982, when the task force began operations. For the first quarter of 1983, the figure was 1,075. It shot up to 1,979 during the first quarter of 1984 after steady increases throughout 1983.

In the South Florida metropolitan area, the figure was 71 during the first quarter of 1982, 115 in the first quarter of 1983 and 214 in the first quarter of 1984.

During the past 13 months, eight have died in Dade County because of severe cocaine reactions. Broward has reported 11 cocaine overdose deaths this year, excluding traffic fatalities and suicides. Palm Beach County figures were unavailable Sunday.

In Palm Beach, in a death that drew national attention to the dangers of abusing multiple drugs simultaneously, David Kennedy, son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, died April 25. Kennedy had ingested particularly potent cocaine along with other drugs shortly before he died.

The odd aspect of the drug picture is that the problem has deepened at about the same time as an unprecedented federal effort got under way.

BIGGER HARVESTS

Observers of the domestic marijuana industry cite the federal drug policy as the reason for the increased harvests.

The industry was in the doldrums in 1981 just before the Reagan administration began putting pressure on imported pot, according to Bob LeBranca, a senior editor at High Times magazine.

"When the Colombian marijuana supply was drastically cut down, the prices of American-grown pot began to creep up and health was restored to the American marijuana market," he said.

The cocaine glut, however, resulted from competition among growers for more profits, according to analysis of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA).

The DEA experts discount theories that the glut came as a response from anxious smugglers overplanting to meet the increased law enforcement effort, or that cocaine kingpins deliberately decided to enlarge demand by flooding the market with cheaper cocaine.

Federal seizures of cocaine and marijuana are up markedly.

SEIZURES UP

During the first quarter of 1984, 5,526 pounds of cocaine were seized, a 55-percent increase over the first quarter of 1983. For marijuana, first-quarter 1984 seizures were 1,033,000 pounds, a whopping 132-percent increase over first-quarter 1983 seizures.

In Dade County, Nehrbass reported that narcotics arrests rose from 259 in 1981 to 1,874 in 1983, cocaine seizures went from 164 pounds to 1,185 pounds, marijuana from 30,951 pounds to 41,634 pounds.

Seizures of Quaaludes, whose manufacture has been discontinued, dropped from 918,000 tablets in 1981 to 102,000 in 1983 and have virtually disappeared in 1984, Nehrbass said.

Overseas, drug fighters have been active as well.

A searching probe of official corruption in the Bahamas is examining allegations, denied by Prime Minister Lynden Pindling and his cabinet, that Pindling and some of his ministers were paid off to provide protection to drug dealers using the island nation as a way station.

TRANQUILANDIA

In Colombia, two lab complexes were busted this year. At the first, where one lab was whimsically named Tranquilandia and another Cocaina, investigators found 13.8 tons of cocaine in the largest seizure ever reported and room for 1,000 workers. At the second, the estimated staffing level was 650 and the haul was 3.3 tons.

Cocaine prices in Bogotá began rising. They are now double what they were in March. But, an informed observer said, short-term profit taking by market speculators, rather than a permanent shortage, lies behind much of the increase. In Dade County, Nehrbass reported, the price rise has been about $2,000 a kilo, between 10 and 15 percent.

The cocaine smugglers began to diversify their refining operations even before the big busts. Since October, 15 cocaine laboratories staffed by Colombians have been raided in South Florida, Nehrbass said.

The drug dealers moved the labs from Colombia because of increasingly tight restrictions on ether and actions, two chemicals used in the reduction of coco leaf to refined cocaine, and internal law enforcement pressure, he said. Nehrbass said he expects new labs to appear north of Dale County and in other states.

And on May 19, two months after the Cocaine bust, the Panamanian National Guard raided a lab complex under construction 50 miles north of the Colombian border and arrested a number of Colombians who were unloading equipment from a vessel offshore, a knowedgeable official said. The official said that lab complex would have been bigger than the Cocaine complex.

"There is no easy solution," said Thompson.

"The old cocaine cowboys and a rather alarming display of violence . . ." by most accounts has been reduced. There has been a reduction in the blatant introduction of drugs here. It's coming in a more dexious manner.

"Perhaps there were expectations that we would dry up the supply of drugs in the streets. But if the community expected to rid themselves of drug trafficking or get drugs out of the schools. I'm sorry they were disappointed.

"There is no choice for people in the law enforcement business than to keep at it. It's obviously disappointing to those who are working very, very hard, but nonetheless, they are out there doing what they feel is necessary job."

NO MERE POINT OF ORDER

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, yesterday, an editorial in the Washington Post aptly described the Herculean job the ranking minority member of the Senate Budget Committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Florida, has undertaken this year to keep the budget process alive and to get action, despite an obstacle course of untold dimensions, on needed deficit reduction measures.

There is no doubt in this Senator's mind that without the tenacious commitment by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], we would not be here today passing a conference report on the budget resolution. Time after time, when less determined men would have thrown in the towel, the Senator from Florida has gone back to the drawing board to seek new ways to get the budget process back on track. Time after time, when less determined men would have walked away from tough negotiations, the Senator from Florida has stayed at the table—even when other players did not show up—trying to forge a compromise and prevent the budget process from falling through the cracks in the end-of-session activities.

I commend the distinguished Senator for his outstanding work and ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in full at the end of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NO MERE POINT OF ORDER

It now appears likely that Congress will manage to finish this session with its budget process still more or less intact. This is owed in no small part to the efforts of Sen. Lawton Chiles, ranking minority member of the Senate Budget Committee, whose determined diplomacy finally pushed House and Senate leaders to agree on a total for next year's Pentagon spending and thus paved the way for final agreement on a budget resolution.

Ever since the middle of summer, Sen. Chiles has been threatening to raise "a point of order" under the Budget Act to keep appropriations bills from coming to the floor until Congress agrees on a budget plan. That agreement, of course, had been blocked not by congressional desire to spend more than the president wanted, but by the president's unwillingness to let Congress spend less on defense than he wanted. As a result, Senate Republican leaders have been unable to agree with the House on a final budget resolution.

Sen. Chiles' delaying tactics have understandably irritated the Senate Appropriations Committee, which prepares detailed government spending bills. To its credit, the Appropriations Committee has been well ahead of schedule this year on most domestic spending bills, keeping them within general limits agreed to by the White House. If Sen. Chiles hadn't held things up, Congress might have avoided refunding most government agencies with a mammoth continuing resolution.

But Sen. Chiles was well aware that if all but a few appropriations bills were passed, it would be very tempting for Congress to bypass the budget process. The president, after all, has been waging a continuous war against the congressional process for the last three years. He finds it inconvenient because it highlights the record deficits he keeps proposing and because it makes it harder for him to get what he wants from the typically complaint military spending committees. In an election year, the budget process can also interfere with a president's desire to provide still more benefits for a key constituency—the nation's farmers, for example—while still preaching budget discipline.

Congress, however, passed the Budget Act precisely to make it inconvenient for both presidents and legislators to yield to election-year impulses. The compromise reached between the two houses will provide the Pentagon with $293 billion next year, surely at, if not beyond, the upper reaches of what it can spend with reasonable care. The appropriations committees will be able to salvage much of their work by incorporating it into the continuing resolution—if not with the same precision and degree of control. And, thanks to Sen. Chiles, the budget process will survive to irritate—and to check—future Congresses and presidents.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

FEDERAL TIMBER CONTRACT PAYMENT MODIFICATION ACT

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask the Chair at this time to lay before the Senate H.R. 2838.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2838) to authorize the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture to provide assistance to groups and organizations volunteering to plant tree seedlings on public lands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

This Act may be cited as the "Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act".

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, in order to retain jobs, to preserve free competition, to utilize the potential productive capacity of plants, to preserve small communities dependent on a single economic sector to assure an open and competitive market for future sales of Government timber, and to lessen the impact of unemployment, the Secretary of Agriculture for national forest lands and the Secretary of the Interior for public lands under their respective jurisdictions are authorized and directed to permit a requesting purchaser to return to the Government a volume of the purchaser's timber contracts as determined under paragraph (2) upon payment of a buy-out charge from such purchaser in an amount as determined under paragraph (3). The purchaser shall be released from further obligation to cut, remove, and pay for timber under such contract upon payment, or arrangement for payment as provided under paragraph (3)(E), of such buy-out charge and completion of any obligation required pursuant to subsection (4)(B).

(2)(A) To qualify for buy-out under this section, a timber sales contract must have been bid prior to January 1, 1982, and be held at the date of enactment of this Act. A contract is qualified for buy-out notwithstanding the fact that it was reformed after October 1, 1983, pursuant to Bureau of Land Management Instructional Memorandum 83-743 or is included in a Forest Service multisale plan pursuant to the President's program of July 28, 1983.

(B) A purchaser holding more than twenty-seven million three hundred thousand board feet of net merchantable sawtimber as of January 1, 1982, in qualifying contracts as provided in (A) shall be entitled to buy out up to 55 per centum of such timber volume up to a maximum of two hundred million board feet.

(C) A purchaser holding twenty-seven million three hundred thousand or less board feet of net merchantable sawtimber as of January 1, 1982, in qualifying contracts as provided in (A) shall be entitled to buy out up to fifteen million board feet of such timber volume or one contract, whichever is greater in volume.

(D) So long as the volume limitation of two hundred million board feet is not exceeded, the percentage limitation of paragraph (B) or the volume limitation of paragraph (C) may be exceeded by a volume amount not to exceed the volume of the smallest volume contract bought out by the purchaser if the purchaser could not otherwise attain his percentage or volume entitlement.

(E) Timber returned to the Government pursuant to this subsection shall be available for resale by the Government upon payment, or arrangement for payment, of the buyout charge and completion of obligations, if any, under paragraph 4(B).

(3)(A) Sums collected by the appropriate Secretary in connection with the buy-out of contracts pursuant to this subsection shall be available for appropriation to the appropriate Secretary for the further management of timber and shall be determined as follows: The purchaser's loss on any qualifying timber sales contracts shall be determined by the Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management by subcontracting the current delivered log value (as determined by such agency) from the delivered log cost based on the current contract return (as determined by such agency) of any such contracts. If such loss is—

(i) in excess of 100 per centum of the net book worth of the purchaser, the buy-out cost shall be $10 per one thousand board feet of currently held volume bought out;

(ii) in excess of 50 per centum up to 100 per centum of the net book worth of the purchaser, the buyout cost shall be 10 per centum of the contract overbid but at least $10 per one thousand board feet of currently held volume bought out; or

(iii) up to 50 per centum or less of the net book worth of the purchaser, the buy-out cost shall be 15 per centum of the contract overbid but at least $10 per one thousand board feet of currently held volume bought out.

(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term "net book worth" does not include the value of any outstanding uncut Federal timber sales contracts.

(C) Net book worth shall be, subject to agency verification, as determined by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards for the timber industry.

(D) A purchaser may elect to pay the buy-out cost imposed by paragraph (iii) in lieu of utilizing loss and net book worth determinations.

(E) A purchaser may elect to pay the buy-out charge in quarterly payments over a period not to exceed five years at a rate of interest fixed at the current rate for Government borrowing as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury. The first such quarterly payment shall be made at the time the arrangement for payment is made.

(4)(A) Contracts returned pursuant to this subsection under which no harvest has begun shall be returned in full.

(B) Contracts returned to the appropriate Secretary pursuant to this subsection under which harvest has begun, shall be returned conditionally. The return shall become final after the purchaser has completed stages of contractual obligations for the units on which the harvest has begun, including work on roads, to logical stopping points as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the purchaser. All remaining unharvested units must be returned.

(C) The appropriate Secretary may reject return of a contract on which harvest has begun if he determines, in his discretion, that the remaining unharvested portion is substantially unrepresentative of the original sale as a whole in terms of species, logging methods, or other appropriate criteria, and that accepting the return of such contract would seriously disadvantage the Government.

(5)(A) Timber from return or defaulted contracts shall be offered for resale in an orderly fashion as part of, and not in addition to, the normal congressionally authorized timber sales program, and in a manner which does not disrupt regional markets or artificially depress domestic timber prices. Timber from returned or defaulted contracts shall be given preference for resale in the Forest Service timber sales programs.

(B) Timber sales in Forest Service region 6 shall not exceed four billion three hundred million board feet of net merchantable sawtimber in fiscal year 1984.

(C) Beginning in fiscal year 1985 and continuing through fiscal year 1991 or the fiscal year in which timber contract extensions in region 6 granted under the President's program of July 28, 1983 (as constituted at the date of enactment of this Act), are completed, whichever is later, the Secretary of Agriculture shall set, and periodically adjust as necessary, the maximum annual timber sale volume in region 6. Such maximum sale volume shall be set so as to achieve a volume of region 6 net merchantable sawtimber under contract at the end of each fiscal year which does not exceed twelve billion three hundred million board feet: Provided, however, That such maximum annual sale volume shall not exceed five billion two hundred million board feet of net merchantable sawtimber.

(6)(A) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall publish final rules for the implementation of this subsection in the Federal Register within ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(B) Such final rules shall require purchasers to submit buy-out requests to the appropiate Secretary within ninety days after the publication of such rules.

(7)(A) For purposes only of determining a purchaser's buy-out limitation under subsection (2) and net worth in connection with buy-out under subsection (3), concerns which are affiliates as defined under paragraph (B) of this subsection shall be treated as if they were a single entity.

(B) Definition of affiliates: Concerns are affiliates to each other when they are primarily engaged in the logging or forest products industry and either directly or indirectly, one concern controls or has the power to control the other, or a third party or parties controls or has the power to control both. In determining whether or not affiliation exist, consideration shall be given to all appropriate factors, including, but not limited to, common ownership, common management, and contractual relationships.

(C) Definition of purchaser: For the purposes of this Act, a purchaser is the holder of a contract to purchase timber from the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior.

(b)(1) Timber contracts bid prior to January 1, 1982, not bought out pursuant to subsection (a) and included in the President's program of July 28, 1983, shall not be subject to any further extension of time for performance except as permitted under the President's program of July 28, 1983, as implemented by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, providing for the extension of certain timber sale contracts and requiring the phased harvesting of such extended contracts, which program is hereby ratified except as modified by paragraph (2).

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, timber contracts extended pursuant to the President's program of July 28, 1983, as implemented by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be subject to reappraisal, to inclusion of additional provisions for calculating damages for default, to changes in basic scaling procedures, or to addition of any contract provision which was not being used in the timber sale program as of June 1, 1984.

SEC. 3 (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to waive annually without charge all or a portion of payment or rental fees required under terms of a permit for use of certain lands of the National Forest System as organization camps by local units of the Boy Scouts of America or such other nonprofit organization when such local units of the Boy Scouts of America or such nonprofit organization are willing to perform services, as the Secretary prescribes and determines will yield a valuable benefit to the public and to the program of the Secretary of such lands. If the Secretary determines that a local unit of the Boy Scouts of America or such other nonprofit organization has not fully performed such services, such organization shall not be entitled in the subsequent year to waiver under the provisions of this section.

(b) The term "other nonprofit organization" shall mean (1) a nonprofit organization holding an exemption under section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended; and (2) a nonprofit association or nonprofit corporation, which is not controlled or owned by profitmaking corporations or business enterprises, and which is engaged in public or semipublic activity to further public health, safety, or welfare.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act entitled the 'Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act'.".

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this is a bill that has finally arrived for floor consideration but which has actually been in the making for about 3 years. It is designed basically to prevent the decimation of an independent segment of the Western forest products industry and the severe impact of such disruption on the communities and workers who rely upon this industry for their economic well being.

The real problem that we have here has been in the making for so many years that it has come into the focus of a pending disaster. I do not use that word lightly for the timber industry, particularly for the small and medium-sized operations.

Over the years, many Senators have become interested in this matter, and I am pleased to say that the Senate version of this bill is cosponsored by Senators CRANSTON, PACKWOOD, GORTON, EVANS, WILSON, GOLDWATER, DECONCINI, FORD, STEVENS, MURKOWSKI, THURMOND, HEFLIN, LONG, and HATCH.

I think one can see quickly by the geographic spread of the sponsorship of this bill that there are many areas of the country which are deeply concerned because the impact of this problem is national. We know that interest rates, we know that availability of supply, we know the problem of housing starts—all of these things are really national problems, not just regional problems.

Most small timber companies in the West are heavily dependent upon public timber. They purchase standing timber from the U.S. Forest Service, the Bureau of Land Management, or some other agency. Then they either log it or hire a logger to cut the trees, and have the logs trucked to mills for processing into lumber. That process is the backbone of Oregon's economy. The independent companies are intensely competitive and also compete with the giants of the forest products industry. Larger companies often own their own lands, which provide a substantial portion of their raw material, while the independents do not enjoy that advantage.

During the late 1970's, for a variety of reasons which are no longer valid, the forest products industry purchased timber from the Government at prices which, at today's market, mean that the raw material cannot be converted to lumber without incurring terrible losses. In fact, if all the timber purchasers were to go ahead and log that timber and produce the lumber and plywood, they would lose nearly $4 billion. Obviously, that loss is unacceptable, and many of the companies will let the trees stand in the forest. The contracts will expire, and the Government's policy in that instance is to resell the timber and bill the original purchaser for the damages, which are calculated as the difference between the original price and the new price. With the downturn in the market, those damages will be unacceptable to small- and medium-sized businesses, and they will have little option but bankruptcy.

As the other party to those contracts, the Federal Government has two options. It can hold the purchasers' feet to the fire, placing them in an untenable position, or it can modify or cancel the contracts. In the 2½ years that I have been involved in this issue, I have urged that the Government be flexible and recognize the devastating impacts of rigid adherence to the contracts. No one gains from inflexibility.

The Government cannot collect its damages from bankrupt companies, workers will lose their jobs, and communities already in precarious situations will be thrust into chaos—all to prove an abstract legal principle that "a contract is a contract."

Mr. President, when two parties to a contract agree, they can jointly modify or cancel a contract. I believe it is in the best interest of the Government to allow purchasers to buy out a portion of these inoperable timber contracts, and that is the purpose of the legislation before the Senate today.

This bill is a carefully crafted compromise which will provide the Federal Government with significant revenue while it retains its timber assets which may then be resold. My colleague from Ohio, Senator METZENBAUM, has had a great interest in assuring that, and he and I have reached an agreement in the form of increased payments which will be required of some of the companies affected by the bill. The Senator from Ohio has had a dramatic impact on the changes which will be levied, but he also has been fair and understanding of our problem.

That portion is limited to 55 percent of the volume purchased prior to January 1, 1982, which is currently held, and any one purchaser is limited to a maximum buy-out of 200 million board feet. The buy-out charges are based upon the net worth of the purchaser as opposed to the potential loss due to its outstanding contracts. Companies whose net worth is exceeded by the potential loss would pay $10 per 1,000 board feet. For companies whose loss is between 50 and 100 percent of their net worth, the fee is 10 percent of the contract overbid. Companies whose loss is 50 percent or less of their net worth would pay 15 percent of the contract overbid under the terms of the bill approved by the committee.

Due to the concern, mainly in Southern States, that return and resale of this timber would flood the market with timber from the Northwest, to the disadvantage of other regions, this legislation includes a cap on timber sales in Forest Service region 6, which will extend to at least 1991. This cap is designed to avoid again having an excessive volume of timber under contract in region 6. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I want to assure my colleagues that I have no intention of altering that cap through the appropriations process. As far as I am concerned, funds will be appropriated for the Forest Service in a manner which will not allow that cap to be exceeded.

In short, Mr. President, this bill is carefully crafted to recognize the various regional interests which exist. It is fair to the Federal Government and the taxpayers of this country, providing hard cash to the Treasury instead of potential settlements following defaults on contracts which will destroy small companies and disrupt local communities. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the legislation.

This bill has gone through a series of hearings, has been approved by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources—and I want especially to thank the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE] for his handling of that bill in his authorizing committee. I have great obligation to many people in terms of their contribution of ideas and thoughts on this from the industry, from the environmental organizations, from the public bodies such as county courts, county commissions, cities, and other groups that are related to this whole problem.

Mr. President, when I indicated my list of cosponsors, I inadvertently left out the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN] who has asked to be a cosponsor. I ask unanimous consent that he be added as a cosponsor of S. 2753.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOSCHWITZ). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I know there are a number of Senators who have an interest in this bill. I note my colleague from Oregon, the Representative from the fourth district, Representative JIM WEAVER, is here. He has been long involved in this problem and has worked diligently to help introduce it in the House and shepherd it through the House. I want to thank him, along with Representative AUCOIN, from Oregon, both of whom have been an integral part of the history of this bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 4803

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have eight clarifying amendments that I would like to offer at this point and then yield the floor after a ninth one. These amendments are basically for clarification and strengthening purposes only. They have been checked with the minority staff of the committee, they have been checked with my cohort on this matter, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], with the chairman of the committee, and others of my colleagues. I ask the Chair at this time that these eight clarifying amendments be stated, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the amendments.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] proposes amendments numbered 4803.

Mr. HATFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 6, line 3, after the period add the following: "The Government does not hereby surrender any other claim against a purchaser which arose under a contract prior to effectuation of this release and not in connection with this release from obligation to cut, harvest and pay for timber."

On page 6, line 6, strike ", and be held at the date of enactment of this Act." and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for an original contract period of 10 years or less, and be held as of June 1, 1984."

On page 9, between lines 2 and 3 insert the following:

"(F) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'contract overbid' is the difference between the advertised contract rate and the rate the purchaser bid."

On page 9, line 7, insert the following after "conditionally": "and shall not be considered as part of the outstanding volume of timber under contract for the purposes of this Act"

On page 10, line 19, after the period add: "The sale of timber within region 6 shall be made in such a manner as not to result in discriminatory treatment as between different forests in the region."

On page 9, line 11, strike "in" and insert in lieu thereof "after".

On page 11, line 8, strike the words "if they were".

On page 11, lines 10 and 11, strike: "they are primarily engaged in the logging or forest products industry and"

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this group of amendments is clarifying and strengthening.

The first amendment simply clarifies that a timber purchaser is not released from any other claims which the Government might hold against him. It is designed to protect the Government's interest.

The second amendment provides a further limitation on the timber sales which are eligible for buy out by excluding long-term sales and requiring that sales be held as of June 1, 1984, rather than the date of enactment.

The third amendment simply defines the term "contract overbid".

The fourth amendment clarifies that, for purposes of the region 6 timber sales cap included in the bill, timber volume returned conditionally shall not be considered as part of the outstanding volume of timber under contract in region 6. This is consistent with the committee report language.

The fifth amendment simply makes it clear that the Secretary has the authority to make the determinations concerning the condition of partially operated sales being bought out.

The sixth amendment ensures that the region 6 timber sales cap does not result in discriminatory treatment among different forests in the region, that is, that the cap will be shared by all forests in our region.

The seventh amendment in this group simply strikes three unnecessary words without altering the intent of the legislation.

The last of these amendments corrects the definition of affiliates so that it conforms with the definition utilized by the Small Business Administration, as was the intent.

Mr. President I urge adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there debate on the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we have examined these amendments and there is no objection on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4803) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4804

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send another clarifying amendment to the desk. This is really a technical amendment in one sense. What it does basically is provide statutory direction and authority to the Secretaries of Interior and Agriculture to avoid a recurrence of the problem we are facing today. It is preventive in nature. This amendment has been discussed and circulated among the interested Members and staff.

In effect, it says it will put the Secretaries on notice that we want them to develop a plan by which we discourage speculative bidding in the future which is part of the problem we are dealing with today. We do not attempt to set into law the formula but we do indicate that a cash downpayment be made on the contract. That is basically the purpose of this amendment. I think the Senator from Louisiana has had an opportunity to examine this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is correct, Mr. President. This amendment is agreeable on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] proposes an amendment numbered 4804.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 12, between lines 14 and 15 insert the following:

"(c) The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior shall monitor bidding patterns on timber sale contracts and take action to discourage bidding at such a rate as would indicate that the bidder, if awarded the contract, would be unable to perform the obligations as required, or that the bid is otherwise for the purpose of speculation. Each Secretary shall include in the annual report to Congress information concerning actions taken under this paragraph.

"(d) Effective January 1, 1985, in any contract for the sale of timber from the National Forests, the Secretary of Agriculture shall require a cash down payment at the time the contract is executed and periodic payments to be made over the remaining period of the contract."

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment also directs the Secretary of Agriculture to include a cash downpayment at the time a timber contract is executed and to require periodic payments over the remaining term of the contract. At present, the cash downpayment of 10 percent of the contract. I do not intend that this amount should be reduced, but want to provide a statutory basis for the downpayment concept.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4804) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, at this time I yield the floor for other opening remarks Senators may wish to make. Then there will be a time at which the Senator from Ohio will propose specific amendments changing the formula for the buyout which we have worked out in agreement with interested parties to this piece of legislation. I yield the floor.

Mr. MELCHER. Will the Senator yield before he yields the floor?

Mr. HATFIELD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I wonder if the able chairman would explain to me what is meant by "net worth" in the terms of the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. I will be very happy to do that. I believe we have given the Senator a copy of our committee report.

I direct the Senator's attention to page 10 of the committee report:

"Net book worth" as used in paragraph (3) means the net worth figure at book value for a company as reported in its most recent annual or quarterly financial statement and shall be subject to verification by the administering agencies. As provided in subparagraph (3)(C), this figure shall be determined by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards for the timber industry. An "independent" CPA would be an accounting firm or practitioner as opposed to a CPA who is an employee of the timber company.

As provided in subparagraph (3)(B), such net book worth does not include the value of any outstanding uncut federal timber sales contracts.

Under existing law the agencies have the authority to request clarification, further explanation, or otherwise verify net book worth submissions to their satisfaction. Furthermore, it should be remembered that these net book worth statements to an agency will fall within the scope of 18 U.S. Code § 1001.

And that gives the boilerplate language of demanding accuracy and authentication and subject to any misstatements they have listed here the fines or prison terms that might be levied. Then we go on through to the rest of that. I will not read it at this point because it gets into some of the more specific formulas, but that is the way in which we have attempted to define net worth.

Mr. MELCHER. If the chairman will yield further, I am aware that the term "most recent annual or quarterly financial statement" will not apply to some of the smaller companies. I wonder what is provided in the bill or in the report to meet that circumstance.

Mr. HATFIELD. If I understand the question correctly from the Senator, we have vested in the Secretary the final determination on what will constitute net worth in that we have listed a general outline. But since this is an administrative matter, we could not conceivably cover all possibilities or all types of industry. What we have tried to do, because of the diversity and complexity of the timber industry, is not to set the guidelines, the criteria, recognizing this is an administrative function that cannot lend itself to codification in law and ultimately has to be flexible enough to let the Secretary make such final determination.

Mr. MELCHER. If the chairman will yield, that is the very point that is not clear to me, and I do not find it in the bill nor in the report, that the Secretary can go outside. The language just says "net book worth." The report only goes that far. I do not think the report language is all that guiding anyway, but as I read the report language, all it says is that the Secretary will check out whether the net worth as presented by the company is accurate. My fear is that—and I have been told this by some of the forest products industry—the term itself is more advantageous to larger concerns than it is to the smaller concerns.

Now, I know that is not the intent of the authors of this bill, and I see no reason why we should leave it in doubt. It clearly is in doubt now. If we could go to something in regard to the Small Business Administration which has terminology—and we have plenty on the statutes as to what constitutes a small business—we get away from some language in the statute that is going to be rather difficult for some of the smaller operators to be on the footing that the authors of the bill intended.

Mr. HATFIELD. May I respond to the Senator from Montana with two observations. First of all, I direct his attention on page 2 to the subsection (C) which is in the lower quarter of the page. It says—and this is from the language of the bill:

Net book worth shall be, subject to agency verification, as determined by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards for the timber industry.

Now, writing that particular criteria into the bill gives the added verification of what we are really trying to do and still protects the small segments of industry and at the same time maintains flexibility.

The second observation, I should like to say to the Senator from Montana, is that the small businessmen of the timber industry, as represented by the North West Timber Association, are fully supportive of this bill.

We have worked with them and other groups from the very beginning because our main purpose has been to try to bring focus to the needs of the small part of the industry, the small entrepreneurs. I assure the Senator that I share his concern, but these concerns have been hammered out over a 3-year period with those precise segments of the industry, the small operators. It is really somewhat surprising to me at this moment that there has been any doubt raised, because they have been the most persistent in looking for some kind of legislative relief.

I imagine if there is any one group that knows this bill backward and forward and can recite it in their sleep, it is the small components of the timber industry. We have worked with these people hour by hour, day by day, week by week, and month by month. I am sure, if the Senator would take a moment to reassure himself by communicating with any segment of the industry, he will find that they are very supportive. They are probably the most totally committed to this proposal as any segment of the industry. I use this opportunity to reassure the Senator of what the focus of this bill is. And when the Senator from Ohio and I complete the amendments which the Senator from Ohio is going to offer, it even brings into more sharp focus the emphasis of this bill to help the small entrepreneur in the industry.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, if the chairman will yield further, I realize that everything he said about the group of mill operators and loggers in the Northwest is true. I realize that the intent and intent of everyone else dealing with this bill has been to assure that the concerns of the small operators are fully met.

However, I must add that the chairman knows better than I that group of mill operators frequently has differing viewpoints on the language in a bill and what I am reporting right now is precisely that. Some of the smaller operators in the inland area, the inner mountain area, have reported to me that they have some concern with this, and knowing the intent of the chairman and everyone else connected with this bill, if there is any way of clarifying this particular point we hope that they will accede to a clarification before we are done with the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator for giving this early-on opportunity to again associate myself with the Senator from Montana in saying that the purpose, the intent, the history of this bill will, I think, be replete with the commitment and evidence to back up that commitment that the focus is to try to help the smaller segments of this industry to survive as against the economic conditions that were not of their making against certain practices within the industry of cannibalism in order to help them survive in order to maintain the diversity of the industry.

I thank the Senator for that commitment he has made for a long while as it relates to timber industry problems.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues from the Northwest in urging the Senator to pass this legislation. I commend particularly the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] about whom it can be said in total truth that without his efforts we would not have reached what seems now to be a happy conclusion. I should also wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] for his thoughtful consideration of this problem, and obviously my junior colleague, Senator EVANS, who has worked diligently on it from the day he arrived in the Senate.

This legislation has the support of nearly all of the timber industry, including the Northwest and the South, most large companies, and small businesses. This diverse industry has worked in good faith for the past 3 years to reach a consensus on legislation that is needed as desperately by the independent mills. To ensure the continued viability of this large segment of the forest products industry in the Northwest, which is so heavily dependent on the purchase of Forest Service timber, relief must be obtained from these old Federal timber contracts.

For a variety of reasons, Federal timber sales in the Northwest during the 1970's were bid extremely high. Rampant inflation, the long term of sales, and Government economic predictions of high housing demand and continued inflation, are just a few of the reasons that led to those high bids.

Beginning in late 1981, however, sharply higher interest rates and reduced inflation forced lumber and plywood prices rapidly downward.

The market has not yet recovered and these highly priced contracts are economically inoperable. If purchasers were forced to go ahead and log the timber under these contracts today, they would be forced to default. Many small and medium-sized firms would be forced into bankruptcy. The losses these companies would incur far exceed their current book value.

In fact, each of these adverse consequences has already taken place with respect to some companies.

Mr. President, to the extent that we can avoid it this should not be allowed to happen. If there is to be any chance of independent mills dependent on Federal timber in the Northwest surviving, this legislation is necessary. This compromise bill will avoid massive defaults and bankruptcies; it will preserve jobs in timber-dependent communities; it will preserve competition and an independent sector of the forest products industry; and it will facilitate orderly management of the Federal timber resource. I emphasize that this is not a timber bailout. The mills will pay a buy out charge to be released from a certain percentage of the timber under contract. The Federal Government gets the timber back and it can be resold at a later date.

Timber contract relief is critically important to a large portion of the forest products industry in the State of Washington and elsewhere. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill today.

AMENDMENT NO. 4806

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS] for himself and Mr. GORTON proposes an amendment numbered 4806.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On section 2(a)(2)(A), on page 6 line 6, after "enactment of this Act.", insert: "Provided, that any such contract that was defaulted after January 1, 1981 may qualify for buy-out under this section so long as i) settlement for damages has not been reached between the purchaser and the United States; and ii) the purchaser's loss on all of its qualifying timber sales contracts, as determined in section 2(a)(3)(A) of this Act, is in excess of 50 per centum of the net book worth of the purchaser.".

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to H.R. 2838, the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act. For purchasers whose potential loss on all their timber sales which qualify for buy out exceed 50 percent of their net book worth, the amendment would extend eligibility to contracts in default where settlement has not been reached with the Federal Government. The amendment would not result in any additional timber being eligible for buy out, but would merely result in a wider range of timber sales being eligible to select from.

To qualify for buy out under the proposal as written, a timber sales contract must have been bid prior to January 1, 1982, and must be held by the purchaser as of June 1, 1984. As currently written, the legislation excludes contracts already declared in default, even though no settlement for damages has yet been reached with the Federal Government. Contracts which already have been defaulted were not included among contracts eligible for buy out because of the conceptual difficulty of having to, in effect, bring those contracts back to life in order to run them through the buy out process.

Mr. President, the equitable arguments favoring companies already in default clearly outweigh the conceptual difficulties of providing them relief. I believe the equitable arguments for timber contract modification apply equally to purchasers already in default. Consequently, I believe they should be afforded relief as well as those who continue to hold their contracts. Many though not all, of the contracts currently in default were contracts which could not be extended under various administration extension policies because of the nature of the timber involved. Many others were held by purchasers whose financial situation was so precarious they couldn't afford to join in the pending North Side Lumber Co. against Block litigation or the administration's Multi-Sale Extension Program.

Mr. President, many purchasers already in default have all but given up hope for their own existence. One such purchaser, Seattle-Snohomish Lumber Co., has just over 100 employees. On January 6, 1984, Seattle-Snohomish defaulted on a single timber sale worth twice as much as the net book worth of the company. Without this amendment, companies such as Seattle-Snohomish would face certain financial ruin. These companies need our help more than anyone. It would be a cruel irony indeed if this legislation excluded from its purview those who need it most.

Mr. President, let me speak for a moment more generally than on just this amendment. The forest products industry in the Northwest is in transition. It is also an industry in deep trouble. It is an industry which has suffered the triple blows of high interest rates over the past few years, expansion of imports from other countries, particularly Canada, and a long recession from which we are just beginning to recover.

This is an industry which has long been the lifeblood of the Northwest. It is the tradition, it is the growth, it is the beginning of the Northwest.

If we were not to pass this legislation, we would simply be requiring companies to pay from treasuries empty. You cannot get money for the Government from bankrupt companies.

This bill, I believe, is likely to maximize revenue to the Government and those sales which are returned represent assets undiminished which can be utilized in the future by the Government in future sales.

Mr. President, I wholeheartedly support the Timber Contract Payment Modification Act as amended. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD, has eloquently explained the legislation and the need for its adoption. There is no need for his arguments to be repeated. I congratulate Senators HATFIELD and METZENBAUM for the efforts they and their staff have made on this much needed legislation. In particular I would like to commend the efforts of Tom Imeson and Tom Winn of Senator HATFIELD'S staff, Doug Lowenstein of Senator METZENBAUM'S staff, and Joe Mentor of my staff for their work on the legislation.

I urge adoption of H.R. 2838, and I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I join my good friend and colleague, Senator EVANS, in supporting this amendment.

The legislation as currently written excludes contracts which have already been declared in default by the Forest Service, even though no settlement for damages has yet been reached with the Federal Government. Many small timber companies in my State are near bankruptcy. Several companies have already declared bankruptcy. If large judgments are rendered against these small companies with timber sales in default, many more bankruptcies will occur.

Many, though not all, of the contracts currently in default were contracts involving substantial amounts of timber subject to rapid deterioration. These contracts could not be extended under the various administrative extension policies without the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. The equitable arguments favoring timber contract relief apply equally to these purchasers, and they should be afforded contract relief as well.

This amendment extends eligibility to those contracts in default after January 1, 1981, where settlement has not been reached with the Federal Government if a purchaser meets a needs test—the same formula that is in the current legislation for determining a company's buy-out charge.

I want to emphasize, Mr. President, that this amendment will not result in any additional timber being eligible for buy out. It merely results in a wider range of timber sales being eligible.

This amendment will help many small timber companies—an important segment of the forest products industry in the Northwest—remain viable and it will help to preserve jobs in timber-dependent communities.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I know this amendment is acceptable to the Senator from Oregon, at least I think it is, but I would not want to proceed until he arrives in the Chamber. The minority has no objection and I have no objection. But, as a courtesy, I think we ought to wait until the Senator from Oregon is here to indicate his position in respect to the amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington State is acceptable.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I was quite certain it was, but I did not want to proceed without the Senator from Oregon having an opportunity to be heard. The minority has no objection and the Senator from Ohio has no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS].

The amendment (No. 4806) was agreed to.

ECONOMICS OF FOREST SERVICE TIMBER SALE PROGRAM

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the Forest Service Timber Sale Program has recently been attacked by critics who charge that the Government is selling national forest timber at a loss.

I expect this debate will continue over the next few years, and Congress will be taking a close look at the situation. This issue is already being clouded with the circulation of inaccurate and misleading information which makes the job of resolving the matter even more difficult.

Factors to be considered in developing an annual sales program that may include sales below costs are rightly to be reviewed and weighted by Congress. In the vast majority of instances, these exceptions to the norm have already been endorsed by Congress and explicitly and implicitly accepted as Forest Service policy. These exceptions include insect, fire, or blowndown salvage sales, or sales that maintain dependent communities, or sales that promote the use of sound silvicultural practices, such as thinning. All of these exceptions are already congressional policies, enunciated in earlier legislation.

There are other instances where the multiple use doctrine of forest management would provide values and benefits to support the need for a timber sales program that might not be able to be justified solely on the timber receipts. These values are calculated by the Forest Service in any number of instances; for example, in the Resources Planning Act, dollar values are established for a number of noncommodity outputs. In developing land management plans, the Forest Service is currently engaged in the practice of assigning values to timber and nontimber activities and is proposing increases in the timber sales program in forest plans only to the degree that these values permit.

The Department of Agriculture recently released a summary of the issue which I feel is a good portrayal and clarifies some of the misconceptions. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this summary be printed in the RECORD and recommend that all those interested in the issue take the time to read it.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL FOREST TIMBER SALES ARE PROFITABLE

Critics have charged the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Forest Service with selling some National Forest timber at a loss.

Pointing to some individual timber sales, they claim that the Forest Service does not receive in cash enough to cover costs incurred to prepare and administer the sales, and to design the roads built in connection with the sales. It is also sometimes charged that costs for constructing the roads are not recovered either. According to this criticism, these so-called "below-cost" sales should not be conducted because they subsidize the timber industry with taxpayer dollars and disrupt forested areas that should be left in their natural state.

These criticisms do not give a complete picture of the issue. Measured only by a criterion of cash recovery compared with incurred costs, it is true that some sales are made at a "loss." However, there are other factors which must be considered:

The Multiple-Use Sustained-Yield Act of 1960 and the National Forest Management Act of 1976 direct that the 155 National Forests be managed for a variety of benefits, not just the production of timber. Maximizing cash profit is not the legally prescribed objective of national forest management. Nonetheless, the Forest Service does make money on its total annual timber sale program. In fiscal year 1983, timber was sold from the National Forests for $195 million more than expenses to prepare and administer the sales and to design the roads to be built by the purchasers of the sales. Over the past six years, expected receipts from timber sold have exceeded the costs of the timber sale program by $5.5 billion.

Some sales are designed to improve the quality of the remaining timber, to salvage and prevent waste of trees damaged by fire, insects or disease or to enhance other resource values, such as wildlife, watershed and recreation. A commercial timber sale is usually the most effective way to achieve these other benefits. When timber stand improvement is the objective of the sale, the unrecovered costs are an investment eventually to be recovered from harvest of the improved stand. When salvage is the objective, the purpose can be to reduce otherwise larger losses, to remove trees occupying growing space needed by new trees, or to reduce the threat of disastrous future timber losses from fire or from insects and diseases.

Forest management requires long term investments. For example, the $235 million appropriated for road design and construction and included in timber sale costs in fiscal year 1983 should be amortized over years and decades to obtain a valid year-to-year cost-benefit comparison.

National Forests are managed for numerous products and amenities in addition to timber. Such benefits include vegetative management, investments in future timber growth, insect and disease control, access for recreation, and wildlife habitat improvements. These additional benefits are derived in large part from timber harvesting. If commercial sales were not used to achieve these other resource benefits, these benefits would either not be achieved or would have to be accomplished using appropriated funds at far greater costs than the "losses" being criticized.

PURCHASER ROAD CREDIT

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I had planned to offer an amendment to this bill which would permit small forest products companies in the intermountain West to participate in the timber contract relief program. These small companies will receive no assistance under the bill as it is presently drafted.

Although I have decided not to offer the amendment at this time, I would like to address the issue here today. It is important to understand a few key differences between the timber companies which operate along the Pacific coast, the west-side operators, and the timber companies which operate primarily east of the Cascades, the east-side operators.

First, because of the species and grade of Government timber grown in the Rocky Mountains, competition for available supplies has never been as intense in this area as it has along the coast. Thus, the east-side operators did not take part in the buying frenzy of the late 1970's and early 1980's which has necessitated the pending legislation.

Second, where localized competition did drive up the stumpage price of Federal timber in the inland area, escalation-deescalation clauses in U.S. Forest Service timber sales contracts allowed stumpage prices to decline as lumber prices fell. Such clauses, which might have precluded the need for this bill, have only recently been added to timber sale contracts in west-side national forests.

Third, when the lumber market began to recover in 1983, many east-side operators either harvested all of the timber from any remaining high priced sales or extended these sales under the President's extension program. For these three reasons, most of the small east-side operators will not benefit from this legislation as it is presently written.

Small forest products companies operating in the Rocky Mountain States do, however, have two things in common with their counterparts on the Pacific coast: They face intense and growing competition from Canadian lumber and plywood producers, and they have suffered immense losses in recent years. Small Idaho timber companies worry that both the Canadians and the west-side operators, which will benefit from the current legislation, will enjoy a competitive advantage over east-side operators for many years into the future.

The small lumber and plywood producers operating in the Rocky Mountains are being neglected by this legislative relief package. These producers, like their counterparts on the west coast, suffered immense losses during the recession of the early 1980's and are suffering again under present market conditions.

Mr. President, the amendment I was considering, but have decided not to offer today, addresses the problem of ineffective purchaser road credits.

Forest Service timber is appraised and sold as though roads specified for construction in the timber sale contract already were in place. Purchaser credit is earned by a timber purchaser for the construction of these roads to be added. It is a contractual mechanism which provides for the amortization of estimated construction cost against the value of timber to be harvested. By statute in 1964, Congress recognized the agency's use of purchaser credit procedures for road construction under timber sale contracts.

The credit which can be earned by a purchaser is limited to the amount the Forest Service estimates will be expended to build the roads specified for construction on a given timber sale.

The Forest Service establishes a base rate for stumpage which includes a minimum stumpage rate set for each species in each region, plus the cost of essential reforestation to meet regeneration requirements of the National Forest Management Act of 1976 (36 CFR 223.4(b)). This base rate must be paid in cash, but stumpage rates above the base rate may be offset with earned purchaser credit. When stumpage rates are at or near the base rate, the purchaser credit earned but not usable for stumpage payment is termed "ineffective" purchaser credit. For the purchaser, this ineffective purchaser credit represents a cost which cannot be recovered in terms of an offset against stumpage payment to the Government. In this situation, the purchaser is in effect subsidizing the Government by building the road at his own expense. These roads may be used in the future by both the Forest Service and the public for recreation, fire control, and other management activities. And I should add, too, they will also be used and perhaps will be used by other timber purchasers who are in competition with the company that made the investment in the road in the first place.

This is a serious problem in the inland States and one which I hope to address in coming years.

Let me suggest that what we are doing here is relieving timber operators of a future financial obligation that is under an existing contract but an obligation they are not yet required to pay. A purchaser credit question can arise in which a timber purchaser in the inland region not only has an obligation to pay but he has already spent the money and has no way of offsetting it against stumpage because of the very change in market conditions that allows the west side operators under this bill to get some financial relief. So we are relieving the west side operators of a future expenditure while people on the east side may have a current expenditure or past expenditure for which there is no relief at all.

That, Mr. President, seems to me to be an inequitable result, but I am not going to stand in the way of the Senator's bill at this time for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is I am very conscious of the plight that the west side operators find themselves in. The fact that we cannot find an answer for the inland operators is no reason for us to deny that to the west side operators with one exception, and that is addressed in this legislation. That exception is the enhanced competition that will come from the better financial condition and lower operating costs that come to the west side operators. This was met in part in the bill, as was suggested earlier, in purchaser road credits and also in the harvest cap placed upon the west side under the terms of both earlier legislation and this.

The cap remains in place, but the purchaser road credit provision that was in earlier legislation has been dropped. I regret it was necessary. I think it was dropped because there are a great many people who do not understand the complexity of that formula and the way it works and the way it works to the disadvantage, and I think the unfair disadvantage, of inland operators. But rather than raise that question at this time and complicate the problems of the Senator from Oregon in getting the relief which I think is badly needed for some of his operators, it would be my intention to defer that to a future debate and hopefully a future resolution.

Senator HATFIELD and I have discussed this matter at length; and, based upon those conversations and the assurance that we are going to have to work together to solve that problem in the future, I will not offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Idaho for the statement he has made. He has very succinctly and poignantly set forth a very serious problem that involves, as he says, the Forest products industry east of the mountain range. We have interests, of course, east of the range within my State as well as within the inland region.

I assure the Senator that I also am grateful that he is not raising this amendment at this time, because I feel that, if adopted, it could well put asunder the fragile coalition we have now behind this bill, of industry, labor, and environmental groups which have indicated a hands-off policy or a neutral position.

The Southern Pine operators, who previously opposed this legislation, have now adopted at least a neutral position.

I think the Senator understands very well the fragile character of the present coalition this might destroy.

At the same time, that does not solve the problem. I say to the Senator that I will exert every energy I have, assuming that we both are in our present positions after November, to address that issue down the road.

I also say to the Senator that I believe it is even a broader issue than it relates to this particular point, and the broadness of the issue is, what are the current specifications that the Forestry Service and other Federal agencies are requiring for road construction for the harvesting of timber?

I am disturbed at times, and I have frequently said that I think there are too many engineers in the Forest Service who are developing specifications for roadbuilding that far exceed the requirement for the purpose of harvesting timber. I would much rather see a whole review of road standards and the cost of timber, which could help, in my view, from an environmental point of view.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his statement. I have long felt, as the Senator has described it, that we have road standards that force the construction of roads that are more expensive than is necessary and that have a heavier impact on the land than is necessary.

Site differences, curvature, and grade, in the manner laid out by the engineers in the construction of these roads, are very likely to maximize the impact upon the environment. The cuts that go up the hillside, the spoil banks that go down the hillside, and the steep drain are much more than would be necessary if the road were built to less stringent standards.

I have been working on this for a number of years, and many of us have been doing what we can to get them to reduce the overbuilding standards that increase the environmental impact and increase the expense, and we have made some progress. I have looked at the new roads built to the new standards now in effect, and they are better than they were, but there is still progress to be made.

I think the Senator is correct that it is a broader subject than just the credits, but there is also another part that must be addressed, and that is the whole question of what is a deficit sale—or, if I put it in the less popular term, when is it economic to harvest timber and when is it not economic to harvest timber? What kind of national policy should we have?

Unfortunately, it is this last issue more than it is the low standards that makes it difficult for us to do equity to the timber purchasers who are faced with the costs of building roads whether they want to build them or not, and cannot get credit for them.

It is the concern of people about whether or not we are harvesting timber where we should not be, whether it is economic to do so—the entire semantics of what is a deficit sale and what is not, and the lack of understanding as to how this traps the timber operator. If we could separate the issues, we could resolve each, but the issues perhaps could not be separated.

I am interested in the statement the Senator from Oregon has made, and I am grateful for his concern, which we have explored in our own conversations. I hope we will be able to work together to find a solution to the problem, so that we can bring some equity.

I also thank the Senator from Oregon for standing firm on that portion of the bill that I think is the only protection that the inland operators have—standing firm in the sense that he understands the fragile nature of the compromise and that changes in that compromise might destroy it. That deals with the cap that was negotiated. I know that he must have been under tremendous pressure from operators on the west coast to change that cap. I suspect that many of them did not understand that if that were changed, there really would not be a bill.

I assure the Senator, in view of the advantage we got in the inland region, the equity we got in the purchaser road credit, if there had been any change in that cap, there would have been every reason for this Senator to oppose the legislation, and there would have been the opposition of the southeast operators as well.

Mr. HATFIELD. I assure the Senator, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that in that role, however long I hold it, we will live up to that cap.

Mr. President, I yield at this moment to the Senator from Ohio, or I will yield the floor so that the Senator from Ohio may take the floor.

I have one other amendment to be offered on behalf of the Senators from Alaska, about which we have talked with the Senator from Ohio, relating to a peculiar circumstance there, which we adopted in the previous so-called Metzenbaum-Hatfield proposal. I will withhold that amendment, if the Senator from Ohio wishes to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, let me preface my remarks by saying that I do not like this bill. I think it is bad legislation. I do not like canceling Government contracts.

I have an old-fashioned free enterprise view about such matters, and that is that when you make a contract, you ought to live up to the contract. If the contract is with the Federal Government, maybe that is call the more reason that you ought to live up to it. I came from the business community, and the contracts I made I had to live up to.

This bill is premised on the concept that people or companies bid for timber and they made a mistake. So now, we find that the free enterprise system is to be bent a little. Doing things the old-fashioned way, as I hear often on the TV tube, is not the way we are going to do it in the U.S. Senate.

So that nobody misunderstands where I am coming from, I am not rising to oppose this bill. As a matter of fact, I publicly commend the Senator from Oregon. For a period of 2½ years, he and I have developed a very close working relationship. In fact, I would say that I do not know of any piece of legislation on which I have probably spent more time than the timber bill in the last 2½ years.

As a matter of fact, on that subject, I have seen some publicity in some of the papers in the West asking what the Senator from Ohio is doing, concerning himself about a timber bill, or $8 billion that the Bonneville Power Authority owes the Government, or the amount of dollars involved in dam safety legislation, the Hoover Dam bill, having to do with extension of a contract for 30 years. It does not affect the Senator from Ohio. Or many other matters, such as canceling $13 billion owed to the Government by the DISC's, or $8 billion owed to the Government by the REA's. They also would like cancellation.

I just have a fundamental enough concept of what is right and wrong that I do not think the Federal Government ought to be canceling contracts or canceling obligations that are owed to it, whether those obligations are due from people in the East, or Southeast, or Midwest, or West, or Northeast.

So, I started off with this piece of legislation saying that I do not like it. But I am also a realist enough to understand that, if I were to put myself in the way of its passage and if I were successful in defeating it, I might have some concerns myself as to whether I had done the right thing because from the inception I had indicated my willingness to help the needy companies; those who, if they were obligated to live up to their contracts, would be bankrupt. And those companies are defined in the bill, as companies in connection with which their debt obligations, or their negative losses in connection with these contracts, would exceed their new worth.

I recognize that, if you are going to lose $200,000 or $2 million, and your whole net worth is $200,000 or $2 million respectively as the case may be, that would bankrupt you if you had to live up to that contract.

Frankly, I would not want to be a party to bankrupting any companies, whether they are large or small. So I have from the outset said I am willing to provide protection for those companies. And I also have said that it did not matter to me whether they were large or small companies, if their negative net worth was such that they would be bankrupt if we did not provide some relief, I was willing to help pass legislation.

I also had indicated I thought there was another group of companies that I was concerned about, and those are what I would call the smallest of the timber companies. And whether they were going to be bankrupted or not, I felt it was appropriate to provide some relief for them. So, we have negotiated, and negotiated. And we find ourselves where we are at the moment.

This bill would help financially ailing small businesses without providing wholesale relief of highly profitable forest product concerns. The version before us, as it will be amended by my amendment, will be a vastly improved piece of legislation as compared to what we first were presented with about 2½ years ago. At the inception, that would have cost the Federal Government $2 billion, if the bill had passed. When I raised the issue with the manager of the bill and others concerned, I think they recognized that there was merit to my concerns, indicated a willingness to discuss the subject further, and to negotiate in connection with it.

The bill will force the nonneedy companies—I think that should be emphasized—to live up to the overwhelming majority of their contractual obligations to cut Federal timber at the prices they originally bid. Most importantly, the bill does not force the general taxpayer to finance a multibillion dollar bailout for an industry victimized by its own decision.

I might say parenthetically to the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Oregon that they did have some colloquy with respect to the road credit issue. In connection with that colloquy, they indicated they might address themselves to that issue next year. And in connection with that, they assumed they might be in the same position they are in.

Well, I want them to know that I am hopeful that they are not in the same position they were in as far as being chairman of their respective committees for reasons that are quite obvious. And, second, that regardless—

Mr. McCLURE. Would the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I certainly will.

Mr. McCLURE. I thought maybe the Senator was referring to my aspiration to becoming majority leader, and being signed on as my campaign manager.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I think over on the Senator's side of the aisle it might help a bit more if I became your all-out adversary.

Mr. McCLURE. Do I have that option? [Laughter.]

Mr. METZENBAUM. I do not know that you need me as a campaign manager, nor that you want me as a campaign manager, but I understand the point of the Senator from Idaho. I will not address myself as to who is going to be the leader either of the majority or the minority on that side of the aisle. I have enough problems of my own.

With respect to the road credit issue, that indeed would be, and will be, a controversial matter. It is not before us. But I would not want the record to be incomplete without at least my indicating that it is an issue of major concern of the Senator from Ohio.

Before I discuss my own amendment, let me give a little background.

In the late 1970's and early 1980's, timber companies anticipated a bullish economy. So they engaged in a wildly speculative bidding binge that drove up the prices paid for Federal timber to 400 percent or more above its appraised value.

Nothing was too high to bid for timber. They would buy it all up. So there were appraisals. Some of those bids were 400 percent higher than the appraised value.

Soon thereafter, the economy went into a nosedive, and the contracts turned sour. Instead of accepting the consequences of their poor business judgment, the timber companies came to Congress for a bailout. They indicated to Congress that they would like to be left off the hook.

The original Senate bill would have allowed any timber company regardless of need to cancel its contracts with the Federal Government. That went too far. We did not hear much from the companies at that point about getting the Government off the backs of the private sector. In this instance, it was the case of the Government interceding, being asked to come in and prop up the timber companies, intervene and permit the cancellation of contracts; quite a reversal.

At that time, I opposed the bailout legislation because I do not believe we should extend unlimited relief to companies unless they can demonstrate that they are in financial distress.

And even then, the price for terminating a freely entered contract should be stiff.

When the industry found that they could not get a bill past the Congress, they turned to President Reagan. Lo and behold, that champion of the free market, that spokesman for making the Government run like a business, that great opponent of Government intrusion into private business affairs—what did he do? With one stroke of his pencil or pen he totally changed the contract and opened the Treasury gates to the timber industry.

In late July, the President agreed to allow timber firms to extend their contracts with the United States for 5 years and excused them—and I want to emphasize this—from paying interest on the uncut volume as had been the practice in the past.

Not only were the companies presently, at this moment—that is what in effect—excused from their irresponsible behavior; they do not even have to pay the customary interest charges.

(At this point, Mr. HECHT assumed the chair.)

Mr. METZENBAUM. So what we have is billions of dollars owed to the Federal Government on contracts that are not being lived up to, the President extends the contracts, the Government does not get the money when it should, and the President of the United States, who keeps blaming the Congress for the fact that the budget is not in balance, totally wipes out the obligation of these timber companies to pay interest on their unpaid debts.

Here is an administration which has excoriated Congress for failing to control spending, but when big timber, the President's political supporters, came to town, that great budget balancer threw fiscal restraint out the window. He will call for a constitutional amendment to change the Constitution requiring a balanced budget, but he is the transgressor in this instance, and he is the one whose decision to extend contracts without interest cost the Treasury $500 million in the first year alone.

But interest-free extensions were not enough for the industry. They wanted more. So a few months ago the industry developed a new contract relief bill. It is interesting how they worked this out. They had a meeting with the northwestern contractors, the southeastern contractors, and the overall timber groups, and they came back to the Congress and said, "We have agreed upon a bill."

The only people who were not present at that meeting were any representatives of the Congress and, to the best of my knowledge, any representatives of the U.S. Government.

They said, "This is the bill, this is the agreed-upon bill." I remember they brought it into my office and said, "Senator, we have agreed upon this bill." I said, "You may have agreed but I have not agreed, and I am not sure that a number of the Members of Congress would be willing to agree if they knew what your agreement is."

I still do not like that bill. I do not like the bill that is before us. But in recent weeks, Senator HATFIELD and I have worked out several amendments that sharply proscribe the amount of relief available to nonneedy companies and sharply increase the price of that relief.

I want to be frank with you. If it were up to me, these nonneedy companies would not get any relief. It is wrong to provide a bailout to companies unable to demonstrate genuine financial need at any time, let alone when we are running a $200 billion deficit.

No matter how you slice it, Louisiana Pacific, Oregon Cascade, and Champion International do not need relief. They can live up to their contracts without it affecting their financial stability. They are among the most profitable forest product concerns in the world. As a matter of fact, Champion just acquired St. Regis Paper for a mere $1.840 billion. So we are not talking about the truly needy.

But it has become clear that unless the industry giants can feed at the trough, they will not stay on the farm. Essentially, they have held small and medium-sized firms hostage to their own greed. So we in the Congress find ourselves in this position: If we have reached the point where we are going to help some companies with genuine need, we would have to provide some limited relief to the nonneedy. I do not buy that concept. I do not like that concept. I am not enthused about that concept. But I am willing to accept the agreement that we have worked out together, provided there are no modifications of it on the floor of this body.

Mr. President, at this point I will offer a series of amendments and explain each of them briefly.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Without losing my right to the floor and not for more than 1 minute, if I may.

Mr. BUMPERS. Let me explain to the Senator what I want. I want to get into about a 1-minute floor colloquy with the author of the bill about a particular situation.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, since I am about to offer some amendments and since it is not urgent that I offer them at this particular point, I will yield the floor to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator from Oregon answer two or three questions that I am concerned about on this bill as they affect some of the smaller timber operators in my State?

No. 1, as I understand it from the bill, if an operator has never entered a tract, that tract is eligible to be forfeited.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. BUMPERS. No. 2, the Forest Service usually divides a tract into units and once an operator goes onto that particular tract, he must go to a particular unit and cut that unit before he cuts another unit. So in this hypothetical case of an operator who has a tract that consists of seven units and the operator, at the time this bill is enacted, has cut three of those units, the other four remain untouched but obviously if he had to fulfill the contract he would have to cut them. My question is, are those four remaining units eligible to be forfeited for loss?

Mr. HATFIELD. Let me answer, if I might, from the language of the bill, which answers the question of the Senator from Arkansas. It is on page 9 of the bill. I believe this will answer his question.

(B) Contracts returned to the appropriate Secretary pursuant to this subsection under which harvest has begun, shall be returned conditionally. The return shall become final after the purchaser has completed stages of contractual obligations for the units on which the harvest has begun, including work on roads, to logical stopping points as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the purchaser. All remaining unharvested units must be returned.

Mr. BUMPERS. That is the provision which has troubled me most. I think the answer to my question is yes.

This says, "Contracts returned to the appropriate Secretary pursuant to this subsection under which harvest has begun, shall be returned conditionally."

My question is does that mean unit or total tract?

Mr. HATFIELD. We deliberately put this language in flexible terminology in order to let the Secretary try to administer equity in the case of partially cut sales.

The purpose of language in here was to address precisely the problem that the Senator is raising. We put it down in such words as "conditionally" because, again, we fell that there has to be flexibility to deal with these problems that we cannot really foresee in every instance.

I would say that to be very specific and make legislative record, the purchaser the Senator describes should be able to return uncut units.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 4839

(Purpose: Increased penalties)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 4839.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 8, line 8, insert after "15 per centum": "for the purchaser's first 125 million board feet, 20 per centum for additional board feet above 125 million up to 150 million, 25 per centum for additional board feet above 150 million to 175 million, and 30 per centum for additional board feet above 175 million up to 200 million."

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the timber bill that the timber industry proposed a couple of years ago that I opposed at that time provided that, upon cancellation, the timber industry would pay a penalty of $3 per 1,000 board feet. The average overbid is $300 per 1,000 board feet; they proposed to pay $3 per 1,000 board feet.

The amendment I am offering would increase the penalties assessed against companies seeking to cancel their contracts to a substantially higher figure. I should point out that under the bill as it is presently written, which reflects much of the movement that has transpired over the past 2½ years between the Senator from Oregon and myself, it is presently provided that companies whose contract losses were less than 50 percent of their net worth would pay 15 percent of the contract overbid. Assuming an average overbid of $300, the typical penalty for companies in that category would have been $45 per 1,000 board feet instead of the original $3 per 1,000 board feet.

The amendment I sent to the desk sets a penalty of 15 percent of the overbid for the first 125 million board feet, then progressively moves it much higher. For timber between 125 and 150 million board feet, the penalty would be 20 percent of the overbid for the right to cancel; for between 150 and 175 million board feet, the penalty would be 25 percent of the overbid. For timber between 175 and 200 million board feet, the penalty would be 30 percent of the overbid. Thus, again assuming an average overbid of $300, this amendment alone raises the penalty payments up to as much as $90 per 1,000 board feet, compared to $3 per 1,000 board feet, a range of from $45 up to $90.

It is my understanding that the amendment is acceptable to the manager of the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, as the Senator from Ohio has indicated, this changes the formula that was originally in the bill with a progressive increase per number of board feet that will be terminated in a contract. It is acceptable. It is part of the compromise that the Senator from Ohio and I have worked out. I support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4839) was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote, Mr. President.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4840

(Purpose: Extension Program)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 4840.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 12, line 10, strike the words "to reappraisal,"; on line 11 change the comma following "default" to a period, and strike the remainder of the sentence.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, as I previously mentioned, last year President Reagan extended timber contracts for 5 years without interest. That will cost the taxpayer $500 million this fiscal year alone. In lieu of interest payments, the President proposed far less onerous obligations on contractors. I opposed the President's interest-free extension program and I am frank to share with my colleagues my view that his action was illegal. I do not believe that the President of the United States has a legal right to extend contracts which people are obligated to the United States without congressional authority. Nonetheless, it is in place and I am not certain as to whether or not there is some legal manner in which his action can be challenged in the courts. But that is not the issue before us.

The industry was not satisfied with escaping with extensions without interest, and timber companies included a provision in the original Hatfield bill to wipe out all the provisions inserted in the extension program in lieu of interest. In short, not only would companies avoid interest charges, they would avoid facing other conditions designed to compensate the United States in lieu of interest.

This amendment removes that language, which I consider to be outrageous. Instead, the amendment leaves the President's extension program intact. So there may be no question where this Senator is coming from, that does not mean that I believe that the President's extension program is good or legal, but I am not attempting in this legislation to change it because, frankly, I do not believe I could be successful with such an amendment.

The only parts of the President's program that would be modified by this amendment are the provisions that increase the default penalty.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has stated the agreement precisely that we have as part of our compromise package. I support the amendment the Senator from Ohio has offered and urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4840) was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4841

(Purpose: Stretch-Out Payments)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 4841.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 8, line 21, strike all through page 9, line 2 and insert the following:

"(E) Where a purchaser is not able to obtain sufficient credit elsewhere to finance the buy-out charge at reasonable rates and terms, purchaser may, upon payment of 5 per centum of the buy-out charge, pay the remainder of the buy-out charge in equal quarterly payments over a period not to exceed 5 years at an interest rate adjusted with each payment equal to the average market yield of outstanding Treasury obligations with remaining years to maturity of five years. Payment must be secured by bond, deposited securities or other forms of security acceptable to the appropriate Secretary in an amount sufficient to cover the entire buy-out payment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, this amendment would permit companies to finance their buyout penalties by borrowing from the United States over a 5-year period. Interest on the loan on that buyout obligation would be at market rates and will be readjusted with each quarterly payment to reflect the cost of borrowing to the United States.

Mr. President, I am frank to admit that I think there are a number of companies that would not be able to come up with the money for the buyout, so this amendment makes it possible for them to finance that buyout, but they have to pay interest, and the Government is not to suffer because it is to be at interest rates that reflect the cost that the United States is paying for money.

Most companies would be required to come up with a 5-percent downpayment, and they would be required to post bond equal to the total amount of the buyout penalty to protect the Treasury against default on the loan.

The advantages of this amendment are limited to only those companies who cannot obtain a loan through normal sources. It might be called the loan of last resort, which would be made available by the Government if they cannot get it through standard banking arrangements.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has stated accurately the agreement that we have reached, and I support the amendment that he has offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4841) was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4842

(Purpose: Disposition of buyout revenue)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 4842.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 7, beginning on line 13, strike the words "available for appropriation to the appropriate secretary for further management of timber" and insert in lieu thereof "deposited in and paid from the treasury in the same manner as moneys received from timber sales from such lands".

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides that the revenue generated by this bill will be deposited into the Treasury and will be handled in the same manner as receipts generated by the normal timber sales program. Under the original bill, the buyout revenue, which could be as high as $450 million, would have gone to the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management. This amendment assures that some of this revenue will help reduce our budget deficits.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this fourth and I believe final amendment to be offered by the Senator from Ohio rounds out the compromise that we reached, and I thank the Senator again for his efforts in reaching this resolution of a difficult problem. I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this amendment, as was the previous one, is suitable with the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4842) was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay the motion on the table was agreed to.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I have noting further to add, but I believe, in order that all may be aware of the attitude of this body on this subject, we should have the yeas and nays. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4843

(Purpose: To allow small, independent timber companies in Alaska to apply for emergency stumpage rate redeterminations)

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I do have one more amendment, which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], for Mr. STEVENS and Mr. MURKOWSKI, proposes an amendment numbered 4843.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At an appropriate place in the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) Emergency stumpage rate redetermination shall be made upon the written application of the purchaser of National Forest timber in Alaska, bid after January 1, 1974, and rates established as a result thereof shall be effective for timber scaled during a period between January 1, 1981 and five years from the effective date of this legislation.

(b) In making the emergency rate redeterminations the Secretary may modify existing contract terms, including the amount of the bid premium, in order to provide rates which will permit the holders of contracts bid after January 1, 1974 to be competitive with other purchasers of National Forest timber.

(c) The provisions of this section shall not apply to contracts held by the holders of 50-year timber sale contracts in Alaska.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Tom Imeson be permitted to remain on the floor during the vote that will later proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment, which I offer on behalf of the Senators from Alaska, was incorporated earlier in the previous Metzenbaum-Hatfield proposal, but that proposal was not adopted and so I am offering it now again on behalf of Senators STEVENS and MURKOWSKI.

Mr. President, in Alaska there is a unique circumstance revolving around the timber bidding practices. There are what we call long-term contracts, which can run up as high as 50 years, and in those long-term contracts the contractee may ask for a redetermination of the stumpage rate every 5 years; then there are the short-term contracts usually related to the smaller parts of the industry. This amendment provides them with some redetermination because the market fluctuates so violently.

The buy-out provision of the bill reported by the Energy Committee would not help the competitive situation in Alaska because the stumpage differential between the two types of contracts would still exist.

I believe the amendment has been cleared by both the minority side and the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this amendment has been cleared. It is acceptable and supported by the minority.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4843) was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the chairman. Does he have another amendment?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I have no other amendments to offer or know of any intended to be offered. I ask the manager on the other side if he knows of any amendments?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I know of no further amendments. We have no further amendments, and so the minority is ready for third reading.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I wonder if we could go to third reading and then recognize the Senator for a statement. Will that be all right with the Senator?

Mr. SYMMS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee substitute, as amended.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon assures me that all understandings that we have reached are a part of this package?

Mr. HATFIELD. They are part of the committee amendments which now reconstitute the original bill as agreed to by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee substitute.

The committee substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] and the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] for their exemplary work in reaching a compromise in these closing hours of the session under very difficult circumstances. Not everyone is going to agree with every jot and tittle of this bill, but it will offer enough relief to the timber industry to save that industry. The Senator from Ohio may be entirely correct about individual companies having made misjudgments for which they should not be allowed to profit. But it is also, Mr. President, not too much to say that but for this legislation virtually an entire industry would be put at risk, and that is not only those segments in the industry in the Northwest but also parts of the industry in the South which would also suffer by virtue of a bankrupt Northwest industry with millions of board-feet of timber flushed on the market without buyers, with prices tumbling, and with the whole industry built up over many, many years being hurt in the process.

Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senators from Oregon and Ohio deserve the thanks of the Senate and of the country, and certainly of the timber industry, for having saved them in a very difficult situation.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge the comments made by the Senator from Louisiana. He has helped throughout the whole process. Passage of the bill today has been made possible by the input of many people from areas outside of our region, from areas that are interested in the economy, of course, and the Nation, of which this is a vital part.

I thank the Senator from Louisiana and again restate my appreciation to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I will be very brief in my remarks. I, too, wish to encourage Senators to support the efforts of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. HATFIELD] to work out with his colleagues—Senator METZENBAUM and others—a solution to a problem that exists in the Pacific Northwest which really is the symptom of a much bigger problem. This will not solve the problem, only alleviate a part of it to some operators.

For the long pull we need to look at the Government monopoly of sawtimber—that, Mr. President is the problem—not so much the monopoly as the ownership by the Federal Government of the timber and land.

Mr. President, I believe there are a couple of points which we as Senators should bear in mind as to what created this problem. If one looks at this great land of ours, he will see that the State of Oregon, for example, has more timber than the entire South.

The State of Washington has as much timber as is in the entire South. If you take the States of Idaho, Oregon, and Washington and combine them, they have 60 percent of all the mature softwood timber supply in the entire United States. The problem that exists is that 75 percent of that supply of timber is owned by the Federal Government. That is why the timber industry is moving South—to escape the problem of being captive to Government supply of raw material.

What has been happening is that you have a private enterprise—capitalist, if you will—wood processing industry out there which is a captive of the state-owned socialist, if you will—timber supply.

I hear the comments of my colleagues who are concerned about voting for this bill, I share their concerns—after all this bill does nothing for the inland region—what we should do is look down the road. This bill may well be a poor solution and only partial at best. What do we need to do to correct an erroneous timber supply situation in which the Government is the primary supplier of this free-enterprise wood processing industry, in which the companies are held captive to a government which can create a shortage by its land management plans such as excessive wilderness and excessive regulations and other problems that come up within this bureaucracy so that timber is not put on the market. As a result the over-abundance of sawmill capacity helped create the situation that encouraged the timber operators to bid too much for what timber was made available.

There are billions of board feet of timber in the Northwest that needs to be harvested. Otherwise, it will rot on the stump, it will become diseased, and will be of no value to the people. That may continue to be the case, but I think what has happened here is that the industry is forced, by its very nature, and particularly the smaller operators are forced, to cooperate with the USDA whether they like it or not. There is coercion without it being intended. I do not say this to be critical of the good people who work for the Forest Service, but it is a matter of fact that the companies have to cooperate with the Forest Service or they have difficulty in operating the sales on which they have entered into agreements because there are many bureaucratic regulations they are faced with, and one USDA person who has nothing at risk can stop an entire operation by an excessive application of the regulations.

Senator HATFIELD and Senator MCCLURE have spoken of the excessive cost of road construction. Senator METZENBAUM has spoken to the issue of renegotiating contracts. This land in the Northwest, with all this Government-owned timber on it, was privately held, and the same situation existed, where people purchased contracts for timber at a higher price than they could pay, due to changed conditions. The sales would be renegotiated. That would be my first preference, but that is not the case.

Companies have come to me in the past year or two with these problems, and I have encouraged them to default on the sales. But people have advised me that it is not practical or possible because of the way the laws are written and the way the Government would treat default, and there would be massive bankruptcies, loss of jobs and the trauma that accompany that.

Senator HATFIELD has done the best job he can. He has worked with the congressional delegation from the House. I have talked to Representative DENNIS SMITH about this. He makes the point that although this solves only part of the problem, it will not be the end of it.

What is happening in the Pacific Northwest is that the big companies are moving to the South. If the small timber companies go out of business—the small sawmill companies—the Pacific Northwest will use Canadian timber, as it now is already doing a lot. The Canadians seem to have a much better system of how they sell their timber. It is also Government-owned, but it is a little more realistic. Their mills can operate in the black as a more realistic system is being used by the Provinces that own the timber.

I hope that out of this debate today, and the ongoing debate that the Senator from Oregon has been involved in during the last 3 or 4 years, Congress can take a good look at all the timber that is held in the hands of the Federal Government and that we can work out a more practical way to sell that timber, so that these problems will not arise again, or return more of that land back to the States in the West and let them handle the problem, so that we do not get large numbers of people in this untenable situation. As I see it with Canadian imports, private ownership in the U.S. Southern States, lack of demand for timber, the situation looks grim for the timber producer.

It can be said that people made a mistake, that you have people in the timber industry bidding too high for the timber. I think the fact is that as long as we have the State-owned socialistic system of raw products supply, it is never going to work efficiently so far as the free enterprise wood processors are concerned, my collegues, this is an incompatible situation that won't end.

I do not like a lot about this proposition, but it is a bigger problem, and we should be addressing the big problem as to what we are going to do with all this Government-owned land in the West, keep it chained up in perpetuity or use it?

In summary, what we have in the Pacific Northwest is this: A Government-caused inflation coupled with a Government-created shortage encouraged bids for the timber that were unrealistic and way higher than their value.

A changed Government policy which slowed down inflation plus slow demand for timber and massive Canadian imports have killed the timber market.

This is a poor substitute for a system which would restore the principles of private ownership to the Western States so these matters could be handled in private or at least State by State instead of the unholy alliance of Government and business.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Idaho for his observations and for his support of this bill. As he points out, it is a typical compromise. It is not everything that any one of us would like to have in the bill, but we have reached a consensus; and, after all, that is the character of this body and the whole process.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and friend the ranking minority member for his kind comments. In putting all this together, it has been a privilege to work with him and the staff of the Energy Committee, and certainly with the staff of Senator HATFIELD. We spent many hours together.

Parenthetically, I also thank Senator HATFIELD for the several lunches he bought me while we negotiated this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I should like to make one final comment, because the Senator from Ohio has raised another mention of this matter which we will finally resolve—at least on the Senate side.

If the Senator from Ohio ever mistreats Doug Lowenstein of his staff, Mr. Lowenstein has a job on my staff. I think we really should pay tribute to these key people, such as Tom Imeson and Tom Winn on my staff, Doug Lowenstein on Senator METZENBAUM's staff, along with the committee staff. I know of no three people who put in more effort at the staff level than Lowenstein, Imeson, and Winn.

I just want Doug Lowenstein to know that he has job security on the Hill, so far as I am concerned. I want to make that of public record at this point.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oregon for being so kind in his remarks about Doug Lowenstein.

I want to say publicly that Doug need not anticipate any wage increase by reason of those comments. [Laughter.] He has done a great job, and he continues to do a good job. Despite the comments of the Senator from Oregon and the offer of a job to my very able assistant, he is not going to get a salary increase, because we have to balance the budget.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I commend the efforts of the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Ohio in working out a compromise on the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act bill. It is an important measure for the Pacific Northwest and for the State of Alaska.

It is no secret that the economic recovery of the Pacific Northwest has lagged behind the rest of the Nation in large part because of the difficulties the timber industry has been experiencing. The problem is one which faces large corporations. It is a problem which impacts directly on people. I urge my colleagues, if they haven't traveled through the Pacific Northwest lately to go see what conditions are like. You will understand why the Oregon, Washington, and Alaska delegations are united on this issue.

The economic stagnation has extended to southeast Alaska as well. While the timber contracting system in Alaska is somewhat different than it is in the lower 48 States, Alaskan loggers still ran into the same problem. Some bids on Alaska short-term timber contracts also turned out to be too high given the subsequent economic conditions.

Unlike long-term timber sale contracts in Alaska, where emergency rate redeterminations can be made, none can be made for Alaska's short-term contracts. This places the short-term contract holders at an economic disadvantage when the timber market is soft—like it is today.

We appreciate the willingness of the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Ohio to accept an amendment extending contract relief to purchasers of short-term timber contracts in Alaska. Under the amendment holders of short-term contracts can apply for emergency rate redeterminations. The amendment is restricted to the holders of short-term contracts. Holders of long-term contracts which also hold short-term contracts cannot use the provision.

This relief will put all bidders for timber in Alaska's national forests on a more equal footing. It will help maintain a diversity of companies operating in the national forests today and ensure that there will be small companies capable of bidding in the future, when short-term sales are let and a market exists for the timber.

Again, Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senators from Oregon and Ohio in working this bill out. I urge its adoption.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the bill being offered here today by the distinguished Senator from Oregon is not a popular measure. Some may call it necessary. Others may call it expedient. I would call it unfortunate.

When this proposal was first offered, it was offered as a bailout. Initially, the bill would have allowed companies to simply walk away from Federal timber contracts, without paying any penalties or even fees to help the Forest Service recover administrative costs. At that time, I objected to the bill for two reasons. The bill contained a number of provisions that would have proved harmful to the already beleaguered timber industry in North Carolina and in other States. Second, the enactment of the bill would have penalized those companies that had exercised better business judgment and did not need relief from their Federal timber contracts.

Since that initial proposal was put forward, holders of Federal timber contracts seeking relief in this legislation have made some significant concessions and have worked with the Senator from Oregon to eliminate my concerns as well as those of other Senators over provisions in the bill that could be adverse to timber companies in other areas of the country other than the Pacific Northwest.

As a result, this bill can now be termed as a "buyout" instead of a "bailout." The bill has been amended to address specifically the concern of southern forestry interests that a flood of Federal timber not be allowed on the market as a result of any termination agreement. As this and other provisions have already been explained by others, I will not take the Senate's time to reiterate those matters. However, I would like to point out that no amount of legislative compromise can address the objection to the current measure for those who have a philosophical problem with allowing a specified group of companies to back out of contracts just because those contracts happen to be with the Federal Government.

Companies petitioning Congress for this relief have told us that unless such relief is granted, many of them will go under. Thus far, this has not happened. It has been the policy of the Reagan administration to extend as much relief as possible to companies and individuals involved with the Federal Government in contractural matters. The administration has done this with thousands of farmers without allowing farmers to go into bankruptcy. The administration has worked out solutions in other areas of the economy where individuals and firms have contracts with the Federal Government. In the matter of Federal timber contracts, the administration has already twice extended the timber contracts of the very companies who are petitioning Congress for relief today.

Since the administration has granted such extensions, it remains to be seen whether or not these contracts can be operated profitably in the future. The administration recognizes this fact and opposes the enactment of this legislation. They have argued that their extension program should be given an opportunity to work, and that Congress should not grant relief to a particular segment of the timber industry at this time.

With all due respect to my friend and colleague, the Senator from Oregon, I must agree with the administration on this matter. However, because the Senator has worked diligently to solve the substantive problems with the bill that I mentioned previously, I can support this measure. I am willing to let the Senate work its will in this matter even though I still have reservations.

Mr. President, this bill is an acceptable compromise that protects the timber industry in the South and provides an equitable approach to resolving these problems.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read a third time, the question is: Shall it pass? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAKER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] would vote "yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EAST). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 94, nays 2, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "An Act entitled the 'Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act'."

REMOVAL OF CONFEREE—H.R. 6028

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] be removed as a conferee on H.R. 6028, the Labor-HHS appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, at the request of the distinguished minority leader, I will request that the Senate recess for a brief period. I will like Senators to be on notice that it will be for a 30-minute period. They should be aware that we have the conference report on the Defense authorization bill and we also have the first concurrent resolution under the Budget Act to proceed with as soon as this recess is over.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, would the distinguished acting majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Could he tell me what the plans are for the Interior appropriations bill?

Mr. STEVENS. It is ordered that we go to that bill. We will go to that bill, but the conference report on the Defense bill is privileged. Following that, we would like to get to the vote on the concurrent resolution, which should get to the House today before the 6 p.m. cutoff for voting. Again, I would remind Senators we have committed ourselves not to have any votes after 6 o'clock.

RECESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, pursuant to the request of the distinguished minority leader, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2:40 p.m. for the purpose of a Democratic caucus.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:08 p.m., recessed until 2:38 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. EAST].

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 3 p.m.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:38 p.m., recessed until 3 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. NICKLES].

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT ON HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 280

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the request I am about to put bears a notation of approval by the minority leader. I will now put the request.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate turns to the consideration of the conference report on House Concurrent Resolution 280, the first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985, the 10 hours of debate provided for the conference report under the Budget Act be transferred to an amendment to be offered by the chairman of the Budget Committee, that no amendments to that amendment be in order, and that it be in order to consider a motion to recede from the Senate amendment to the House resolution and concur therein with a further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I want to thank the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished assistant majority leader for giving those of us on this side of the aisle time to discuss this request. We did that. We have no objection.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader. As I explained yesterday, this procedure will materially expedite our consideration of the budget resolution in advance of that budget resolution by the House, which is the request of the House which we are having to comply with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the distinguished leader.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, am I correct that nothing is pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

FIRST CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, even though the chairman and the ranking member of the Budget Committee are not here, I am advised that they are on the way. In order that something be pending, I submit a report of the committee on conference on House Concurrent Resolution 280 and ask for its immediate consideration. That is the conference report on the budget resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 280) revising the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal year 1984, and setting further the congressional budget for the United States Government for the fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree on a conference report because the conference decisions have changed certain budget figures outside the scope of the conference. As set forth in the accompanying joint explanatory statement, the conferees do propose a congressional budget incorporated in a further amendment for the consideration of the two Houses, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report will be printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is pending on House Concurrent Resolution 280.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, the conference report which is now before us represents months of work, a great deal of time, and very difficult negotiations by many Senators, Representatives, administration officials, the President himself, and respective staffs. The decisions it embodies have not been easy, and some have been especially painful. But should we have expected anything different? The Federal budget is, indeed, the blueprint for how we choose to address some very complex issues of the day.

The process which we are concluding today began back on February 1 of this year, nearly 9 months ago, when the President submitted his fiscal year 1985 budget to the Congress and the Senate Budget Committee began its hearings. The fact that this measure is still alive after all this time, and that we will get a budget resolution for fiscal year 1985, testifies, I believe, to the strength and vitality of the budget process. It is a process that evokes very strong emotions at times. It is a process that sometimes is very difficult; however, clearly one that accomplishes a great deal and we cannot live without.

I thank the majority leader, the minority leader, and my colleagues for the support they have given to this process and to me over these past months. I am particularly thankful to Senator CHILES, who has persisted in wanting to see the process work and to whom we all owe a great deal of gratitude for making this resolution possible. Obviously, he understood the problem we were confronted with, and because he understood that we did make the necessary accommodations with the White House and the House of Representatives on the defense authorization and defense appropriation number, which broke the logjam and permits us to be here today and in a very real sense permits a number of appropriations committee bills to reach fruition—if not individually, many of them will be found in the continuing resolution.

The majority of the conferees on this measure are of the opinion that this agreement is a realistic budget plan for the upcoming fiscal year. As is commonly the case with conference agreements, none of us got everything we wanted. We all took some changes and some modifications we did not like. But the end result is a budget plan encompassing spending restraint, a reasonable tax burden, and significantly reduced deficits over that which we passed in the Senate and which the House passed. This budget plan will assure that the improvement in the economy which has taken place will have a chance to continue, economic stability in the country will continue, and we will do that without sacrificing our national defense or, as I see it, penalizing those who can least afford it.

This resolution embodies the major tax and spending legislation and all of the changes that have been adopted by Congress, those that were adopted in July in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, all of which are in this resolution. Some of those changes were mandated by last year's reconciliation which was still pending at that time. It also reflects the House and Senate leadership agreement on defense that has made possible the completion of the resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the conference agreement policy changes for the major categories of the budget be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] This baseline is the one used in connection with the Senate-passed First Budget Resolution. It assumes the CBO February baseline for revenues and for nondefense spending and the President's budget request—not reestimated by CBO—for defense spending, plus an interest adjustment to take account of the defense change.
[2] Revenue increases show as negatives because they reduce the deficit.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this table shows most importantly that the conference agreement reflects a reduction in the deficit by $149.2 billion over the period fiscal years, 1984–87. When we began deliberations on this budget last spring, while it might be called different things by different people, a downpayment on the deficit of $150 billion was the leadership's target figure. Over the course of time, committee and floor deliberations reduced that figure to the point that when we completed action on the Senate floor last May 18, the deficit downpayment was $140 billion. I am extremely gratified that the conference agreement before us today effectively achieves the $150 billion downpayment target as originally desired.

In an election year, as difficult as that may be, collectively we have delivered what we started out to do. In a sense, we have delivered on what we promised.

Certainly this conference agreement downpayment is constituted differently than what we had originally envisioned, but I would remind my colleagues that the House-passed resolution that we conferenced on was significantly different in its defense spending and nondefense spending assumptions. The differences in the two resolutions account for the inordinate time required to resolve our differences. Indeed, I dare say most of my colleagues had probably concluded that our differences would never be resolved, but we have succeeded and the process remains intact.

The conference agreement will have a beneficial effect, as I see it. I do not think I am alone. As Dr. Rudy Penner, Director of the Congressional Budget Office, observed yesterday in testimony before the House Committee on Ways and Means, the legislative actions adopted this summer have stabilized the deficit relative to the size of the economy. Based on the current CBO projections, the deficits reflected in this conference agreement will decline to 4.5 percent of GNP in fiscal year 1987. Contrast this 4.5 percent ratio with CBO's February projections that showed it increasing to 5.4 percent in fiscal year 1987.

No one should suggest that our work is done. After all, this was only a downpayment. We have, however, accomplished far more in reducing the deficit than anyone ever expected in this very political year.

I believe we have also accomplished something more difficult to quantify. In the course of these budget deliberations we have aired many issues fundamental to our economic and political system. Given the political divisions that exist in this vast country, no quick or simple solutions are readily available for something as complex as reducing the deficit. But as our majority leader has said on prior occasions, "the public discourse has been significantly advanced by what we have done here."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table summarizing the conference agreement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to the conference report on the budget resolution for fiscal year 1985. I oppose this budget resolution because it does not go far enough in reducing the enormous Federal Government budget deficits in 1985 and in the following years.

The budget resolution provides for Federal deficits of $180 billion in 1985, increasing to $191 billion in 1986 and $205 billion in 1987. These deficits will be the largest in the history of our Nation, and instead of decreasing in the coming years, continue to increase year after year.

The deficits pose a serious threat to the continuation of the current economic recovery and continued economic growth without a renewal of runaway inflation.

The deficits simply must be reduced, and I am disappointed that the Congress has not been able to take effective action this year to bring the deficits under control.

When the Senate considered this budget resolution in May of this year, I voted repeatedly for measures that would have provided larger and more significant cuts in the deficit. I voted for the Democratic budget alternative plan that would have reduced the deficit by $204 billion over the next 3 years—$50 billion more than the deficit reduction finally approved by the Senate. I voted against the budget resolution in May because it did not reduce the deficit enough, and I oppose it today for the same reason.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the conference report before us, on the first budget resolution for the next fiscal years, provides for rising Federal budget deficits for 3 more fiscal years. It promises the largest increase in the Federal debt ever recommended by the Congress. By fiscal year 1986, the national debt will reach $2.1 trillion—more than double the debt when the current administration took office in 1981. By fiscal year 1987, the debt will exceed $2.6 trillion. The interest burden to service this rising unconscionable debt will reach $134 billion by fiscal year 1985, of a total deficit of $178 billion. This finance charge on the debt will cost American taxpayers $367 million a day next year; by fiscal year 1987, the interest costs will reach $460 million per day. This will amount to 41 cents of each dollar paid by the American people in individual income taxes.

This is what the Federal deficit is about. Not spending: interest.

There is no equivalent to this situation in American history. It is a wholly new situation—and to understand it, it helps to separate the problem into two parts. First, there is the primary, or program deficit: The amount spent on Federal programs, less Federal revenues. Second, the interest deficit: The amount paid in interest on outstanding debt.

Until recently, primary deficits have been relatively rare. There were two in the 1950's, two in the 1960's. They were relatively small—1962's was $300 million. There were six in the 1970's, but still not large ones, except for the $40 billion primary deficit in the post-recession year 1976.

This pattern continued until the walloping $105 billion primary deficit in the depression year 1982. But of late, the primary deficit has slacked off. The primary deficit this fiscal year is some $61 billion, of a total deficit of $172 billion. The Congressional Budget Office projects that the primary deficit will average about $46 billion a year for the remainder of the decade.

But the interest deficit has begun to go out of control. In 1980, the Treasury spent $52 billion in interest payments. This year, the bill will reach $111 billion. By 1989, $214 billion.

Program deficits are simple arithmetic. The amount spent on farm programs does not affect the amount spent on the defense program. But the interest deficit is algebraic. Change one part, and you change the whole.

What Lord Keynes called the "magic of compound interest" works with debt as well as with savings. It starts slowly, then explodes.

The deficits and the debt are exploding, then, but largely from the rapidly growing interest deficit, not from the growth in the primary deficit.

The basic compound interest equation demonstrates what's happening $D_n = D_o(1+r)^n$. If the debt today (D_o) is $1 trillion, and the interest rate paid on this debt is 10 percent (r), in 5 years (n)—with no new primary deficits—the debt (D_n would be more than $1.6) trillion. Today, the debt is more than $1 trillion, and the interest rate on the debt is far more than 10 percent.

Under this conference agreement, the national debt will be fueled in part by modest primary deficits, running close to the primary deficits calculated by the Congressional Budget Office's baseline estimate of about $46 billion a year. The interest deficit is the unstable element, rising to $214 billion a year to 1989, and on from there. This means we will be borrowing money to pay interest. This always happens when the growth in interest payments in greater than the growth in the primary deficit.

Technically, this has happened before, but infrequently and at such low levels as to be of no real significance. It is wholly different now. We will be borrowing hundreds of billions of dollars to pay interest alone. The result is an exploding deficit: the interest deficit, not the program deficit, going out of control.

We have been thinking arithmetic. We have to begin thinking algebra. In 1982 and again this year, Congress cut domestic spending and raised taxes. Still the deficit climbed. The problem is the algebra of compound interest that has superseded the arithmetic of spending cuts and tax increases.

This is new. We have never experienced anything like it. If we go on using the old terms, it is likely we will shortly face a crisis unlike any we have ever known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 2. (a) For fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, any revenues raised by legislation enacted on or after March 15, 1984, shall only be used to reduce the Federal budget deficits for such fiscal years except to the extent that such legislation earmarks all or any part of such revenues for specific spending programs.

(b) For fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, increased funding would be appropriate if authorizations are enacted for education programs, environmental protection, health research activities, and such specific low-income programs as employment initiatives for disadvantaged youth, public works jobs for community renewal, increased funding for Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the State component of the Supplemental Security Income program in order to ensure that the purchasing power of recipients is maintained, increased funding for Title XX of the Social Security Act, and an increase in the earned income tax credit, pursuant to subsection (a) above, if sufficient outlay reductions or new revenues are also enacted to ensure that the legislation is deficit neutral.

ADMINISTRATIVE SAVINGS

SEC. 3. It is the sense of the Congress that the executive branch shall achieve as much of the $153.2 billion in savings as is feasible, but in no case less than $2.0 billion over fiscal year 1985 through 1987 which have been recommended by the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control and which can be achieved through administrative action within that branch of Government. It is further the sense of the Congress that the President should report to Congress each year, in conjunction with the annual budget submission, on the progress made in achieving the savings required by this section, and that the budget submission for fiscal year 1986 should contain information regarding such administrative savings as have already been achieved.

AUTOMATIC SECOND BUDGET RESOLUTION

SEC. 4. (a) Effective October 1, 1984, this concurrent resolution shall be deemed to be the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985 required to be reported under section 310(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, for the purposes of the prohibitions contained in section 311 of such Act.

(b) Section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as made applicable by subsection (a) of this section, shall not apply to bills, resolutions, or amendments within the jurisdiction of a committee, or any conference report on any such bill or resolution, if—

(1) the enactment of such bill or resolution as reported;

(2) the adoption and enactment of such amendment; or

(3) the enactment of such bill or resolution in the form recommended in such conference report;

would not cause the appropriate allocation for such committee of new discretionary budget authority or new spending authority as described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 made pursuant to section 302(a) of such Act for fiscal year 1985 to be exceeded.

(c) The provisions of this section shall cease to apply when Congress completes action on a subsequent concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985 pursuant to section 304 or 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974

SECTION 302(b) FILING REQUIREMENT

SEC. 5. (a) It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider any bill or resolution, or amendment thereto, providing—

(1) new budget authority for fiscal year 1985;

(2) new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act first effective in fiscal year 1985; or

(3) direct loan authority, primary loan guarantee authority, or secondary loan guarantee authority for fiscal year 1985;

such committee makes the allocation or subdivisions required by section 302(b) of the Congressional Budget Act, in connection with the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget.

(b) The prohibition contained in subsection (a) shall not apply until twenty-one days of continuous session, as defined in section 1011(5) of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, after Congress completes action on this concurrent resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished chairman and colleague, the Senator from New Mexico, for his kind words. I also compliment him for his ever-enduring dedication to the budget process and for his work this year in trying to see that we did get a budget and maintained a budget. Without that, I believe we would not be here today.

This has been the longest year for the budget process. Yet, by accepting this conference report and adopting a budget resolution, we still have the chance to turn the corner toward real budget discipline.

It has been 10 years since we passed the original budget statute. Congress put the Budget Act in place because we understood we had to change our ways. I am not sure we understood at the time just how difficult the change would be.

For decades prior to 1974, we spent money and collected revenues virtually on the basis of a gentelmen's agreement and a handshake. We never really knew from year to year how much a program would cost or how many new ones we would enact.

We simply had a sort of unspoken confidence that no matter what we did, the economy would just keep growing enough to accommodate our expensive habits.

It turned out our ideas were bigger than our wallets. Instead of an ever-growing economy, we began to accumulate an ever-growing debt.

So, in 1974, we agreed to lay out an annual economic blueprint. And by including an enforcement mechanism called reconciliation, we tried to put some teeth in our good intentions.

After 10 years of tests and questions and arguments and griping, I think this Congress now has the chance to prove a crucial point. And the point is that the budget process is the best thing we have going to get our affairs in order.

Just look back with me for a minute over the past year.

It has never taken us longer to approve a budget than it has this year. In all previous calendar years, we had a budget in place by June at the latest. Not this year. It is nearly the end of September, and we have yet to take the final step. Ordinarily, that would make some people think the budget process was in trouble.

But think again. Think about all the chances we had this year to walk away from the process.

We could have done it in February, when the White House issued its own budget that had scarcely any new revenues and included further big increases in military spending. But on this side of the aisle we said the President's deficits were too large, and we asked for $200 billion more in deficit cuts.

The White House reacted to that by proposing the rose garden deficit reduction plan. The budget process served as a fulcrum in those events to push us toward doing better.

A little later in the year, we had another chance to bypass the Budget Act when a parliamentary end-run was proposed to bring the rose garden plan directly to the floor rather than taking it through committee. But we insisted that a Budget Committee markup be held so the Nation could get a look at the bottom line of the rose garden plan.

When the budget finally made its way to the Senate floor, we haggled over it for a month. We voted on several plans before a deficit-reducing budget resolution was adopted. Once again, the forms prescribed by the Budget Act forced us to face facts many would have preferred to avoid in an election year.

Once the Senate passed a budget resolution, however, the entire process almost stalled out in conference over legitimate differences on military spending.

But after some extended debate, weeks of disagreement and delay, we came to a key point. In fact, we got down to the very essence of the Budget Act itself.

When the leadership tried to bring up appropriations bills even though we had not given final approval to the budget resolution, the issue was joined.

The Budget Act is very clear. It says you do not spend money until, first, you approve a budget. That is the core of the matter. Would we honor the law we passed, and accept the discipline we imposed on ourselves?

We worked our way out of that dilemma by agreeing to some two-house, two-party summitry to break the logjam on the issue that divided us: Military spending. Some Senators preferred to accept ranges of spending—high and low figures—in which military spending could float and seek its own level.

It turned out they took that position because they were concerned military spending would sink too low. I argued for a specific number on spending because I was concerned that, without it, military spending would climb higher than a debt-ridden economy could support.

We are at a point now where the differences have been resolved in conference, and we have the chance to approve a budget.

What all this tells me is that Congress is serious about the budget process. We had many chances to lay it aside. And with Congress headed toward adjournment, we could have turned our backs on it altogether.

But we have kept at it; worked and bargained right on to the 11th hour because—with all its faults and shortcomings—I think the budget process has finally earned its stripes as a discipline that can work if we are willing to make it work.

This conference report is the evidence that we believe the process is worthwhile. But the conference report is also evidence that we have to convert the budget process into a genuinely effective tool for reducing deficits.

The 3-year difference in the deficits between the President's February budget and the conference agreement is a net reduction of $54.5 billion. Measured against the Senate's version of the budget resolution and using comparable economic assumptions, the conference agreement reduces the deficit even further, by an additional $21.2 billion.

That is the good news.

The bad news is that even with these changes that make the deficits smaller than they might have been, they still grow to levels higher than they have ever been. In fact, the deficit will climb to over $200 billion in 1987.

So we have to make the budget process work harder. But at least this year we brought military spending within the process. The President, early on, had suggested $313 billion in military spending for fiscal 1985. The conference agreement is for $292.9 billion.

Mr. President, I do not plan to fine-comb the agreement in my talk today, and I ask unanimous consent that explanatory tables be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I think one of the best evidences of the need for a Budget Act is when we did not have a Budget Act we could not resolve a conference on the defense authorizing committee, we could not resolve a bill for defense spending on the Appropriations Committee, and when we came to agreement in the budget conference and when we arrived at a figure that we could agree on in the budget conference, we see the House of Representatives has already passed the conference report on the defense authorizing bill, and I assume we will be taking that up shortly and the Appropriations Committee in the Senate has not voted out a defense appropriations bill. I assume the House of Representatives has done this as well. And that has now broken the logjam, too.

So I think the proof of it is the fact that once we get an agreement on the budget, then agreements followed on these others and hopefully we will learn a lesson that next year we will work on the budget first and we will get that agreement and recognize that is the thing that must be first.

So what we have in this conference agreement is a compromise. It is certainly not an ideal for many, and for some it may not even be satisfactory. I know that I do not give it unbridled endorsement. But it does have my support. I think it is essential that we approve it, knowing that we have to do better next year, but I think that we will not be able to do better unless we stick with the budget process.

Mr. President, I am, therefore, going to recommend the adoption of the conference report.

CONFERENCE OUTCOME: DEFICITS

(Prepared by minority staff of the Senate Committee on the Budget)

The conference agreement provides lower deficits than the Senate-passed First Concurrent Budget Resolution, if comparable economic assumptions are used in both estimates (see table 1). Under the conference agreement, the deficit would be reduced relative to the Senate-passed resolution by $1.3 billion in FY 85, by $5.3 billion in FY 86, by $14.5 billion in FY 87, and by $21.1 billion over the three-year period. Of this total, $18.1 billion would result from reduced defense outlays and an additional $1.2 billion from lower interest costs. These reductions would be somewhat offset by non-defense spending increases of about $6.0 billion. Technical changes in CBO's estimate of spending and revenues reduce the assumed deficits by an additional $9.9 billion. Changes in the final contents of legislation enacted since the Senate passed its Budget Resolution will result in $2.1 billion of added deficits.

Use of CBO's updated economic assumptions further lowers the FY 1985 deficits which are estimated to result from the Budget Conference agreement but the updated assumptions will raise the estimated deficits for FY 86 and FY 87. In fiscal year 1985, higher estimated growth in the economy is expected to yield an additional $5.1 billion in revenues, but higher estimated interest rates and other changes will result in $4.4 billion of additional spending (including spending on net interest). Deficits, therefore, are estimated to be $.7 billion lower when the complete updated economic forecast is taken into account. In both FY 86 and FY 87, however, the revised economic forecast suggests both lower revenues and higher interest rates, resulting in added deficits of $8.8 billion and $15.0 billion in these two years respectively. Finally, a decision by the conferees to move elements of the foreign military sales account on-budget will result in additional deficits in all three years, totalling $6.1 billion over the period.

REVENUES

The Conference agreement sets a revenue floor of $672.90 billion in FY1980, $750.90 billion in FY1985, $810.80 billion in FY1986 and $881.00 billion in FY1987. These levels represent revenue collections above current law estimated at time of passage of House and Senate budget resolutions of $9.90 billion in FY1984, $17.90 billion in FY1985, $15.90 billion in FY1986 and $17.50 billion in FY1987.

The Conference revenue figures reflect the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, as well as other revenue raising legislation enacted since passage of the Senate and House budget resolutions, economic and technical re-estimates based on revised Congressional Budget Office projections and some allowance for miscellaneous revenue legislation that may be enacted.

CREDIT BUDGET

The credit budget reflects nonbinding targets for new direct loan obligations and primary and secondary loan guarantee commitments. The table below displays Senate and House passed aggregate credit levels for each of the four fiscal years 1984–1987, as well as agreed upon conference credit budget targets.

The credit budget contained in the conference agreement reflects the decisions of the conferees on Budget authority and outlay amounts in the various functions. The credit budget amounts in the conference agreement also include adjustments to reflect enacted legislation affecting credit program activity, e.g., the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 and the Agricultural Programs Adjustment Act of 1984; and to reflect economic and technical re-estimates by the Congressional Budget Office contained in its August 1984 budget update.

DISCUSSION

The effect of this resolution is to reduce the President's initial FY1985 request for Defense by $20.5 billion in budget authority and by $9.1 billion in outlays. Over the three years FY85–87 savings of $84.1 billion in budget authority are achieved as well as $46.2 billion in outlays. Furthermore, the ratio of budget authority to outlay reductions discourages further significant cuts in the faster outlaying operations and readiness accounts.

Accommodates complete shift of Foreign Military Sales program on-budget.

1985 levels are less then the levels reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee (−$0.3 billion in B.A.; −$1.0 billion in outlays); 1985 levels are higher than the levels marked up by the House Appropriations Committee (+$0.33 billion in B.A.; no change in outlays).

Outyears provide for an increasingly constrained international affairs budget.

DISCUSSION

The House receded to the Senate on F. 500. The conference report does not contain language detailing program assumptions.

For FY 85, the Senate resolution assumed an additional $1.3 billion for programs within the Department of Education and the freeze level for other F. 500 programs. Subsequent actions by the Appropriations Committee has allocated portions of the $1.3 billion for some job training and social service programs—such as Job Corps and the Administration on Aging.

Inflation adjustments are assumed in the outlying years. Since these are based on the 1984 appropriations level, there is a slight leveling off in growth between FY 85 and FY 86.

Grace Commission savings are contained in the outlying years for the Guaranteed Student Loan Program ($160 million); this reflects the passage of the deficit Reduction Act which authorized the IRS to offset debts owed the federal government against federal income tax returns.

DISCUSSION

Both Senate-passed and House-passed levels assumed the effects of already-passed Medicaid and other health legislation in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. The difference between the Senate-passed and House-passed resolutions reflect differences in assumptions for discretionary appropriated health programs. The conferees agreed to split the difference between the two resolutions.

MEDICAID

The resolution reflects already-enacted increased Medicaid spending for mandatory expanded coverage for pregnant women and children a new "CHAP" program (+$0.3 billion over four years), and an additional increase (+$0.6 billion over four years) as a result of several changes made to the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) programs. Other already-enacted Medicaid provisions (income verification procedures and other small items) would save $0.7 billion over four years. The net four-year effect of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 on Medicaid, reflected in the First Concurrent Budget Resolution conference agreement, is +$0.3 billion in budget authority and +$0.2 billion in outlays over four years.

DISCUSSION

The conference outcome reflects the Medicare provisions in the already-passed Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, with four-year outlay savings of $6.0 billion. Included in the new law are provisions to freeze Medicare payments to physicians for 15 months, including establishment of new program procedures to protect Medicare beneficiaries from high medical charges; additional constraints on Medicare payments to hospitals; making permanent a previously-enacted provision setting beneficiary-paid premiums at 25 percent of the costs of Medicare Part B program; and other smaller provisions. (The small difference between the original Senate and House-passed resolutions reflects a Senate freeze on some administrative accounts in the out-years.)

DISCRETIONARY HEALTH PROGRAMS

The Senate-passed plan assumed an $0.7 billion increase in BA above a freeze level for FY 1985, with inflationary increases from the prior base in the out years. The House-passed plan assumed an aggregate increase of 3.5 percent nominal growth (below baseline inflation) for all discretionary programs, with additional unspecified amounts set aside within function 920 to allow for 3.5 percent real growth (above baseline) for priority health programs.

The conferees agreed to split the difference between the two resolutions, enough to accommodate baseline spending levels as well as modest growth in priority health programs.

DISCUSSION

Conference agreement provides room over 3 years for $.6 billion in BA above the baseline for Child Nutrition and $1.0 billion for Food Stamps.

Conference agreement provides room over 3 years for $.5 billion in BA above the baseline for the Women, Infants and Children Supplemental Feeding Program (WIC).

Conference agreement provides room for an increase in the baseline for Low-Income Energy Assistance of $.2 billion in BA each year in order to set the baseline at the legislatively revised (higher) FY84 level. The agreement also provides room over 3 years for $.6 billion in BA above the baseline for this program.

$2.7 billion in BA over 3 years for the programs mentioned above had been assumed in Function 920 in the original House-passed resolution. The conference agreement assumes these funds in function 600 instead.

Agreement assumes a reduction in Budget Authority for subsidized housing in FY85 by $2.7 billion from House-passed level and $3.3 billion from Senate-passed level, reflecting the enacted HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations law for FY85.

DISCUSSION

Numbers for both Senate-passed and House-passed resolutions shown include approximately $0.7 billion in savings over four years from already-enacted legislation contained in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. These savings were generated from modification to allowable time periods for retroactive awards of non-service-connected disability pensions and death pensions to survivors of war veterans as well as changes in the home loan guaranty program. The remaining differences were primarily due to differing assumptions for discretionary programs (hospital and medical care). The Senate-passed resolution assumed a freeze in FY1985 with baseline funding levels in FY1986 and FY1987. The House-passed resolution assumed discretionary program growth of 3.5 percent above the freeze level.

The conferees adopted the Senate-passed resolution. The conference agreement makes room for a 10 percent GI Bill COLA increase effective October 1, 1984 and assumes a full compensation COLA in January.

Conference agreement provides $50 million more than Senate-passed resolution in FY85 Budget Authority and $150 million more than Senate version over three year period from FY 85–87 in Budget Authority.

Conference agreement assumes annual nominal growth of 3.5% for the function. Programs in Function 750 include federal law enforcement agencies, legal services, juvenile justice and delinquency prevention, federal prison system and criminal justice assistance funding.

Conference agreement assumes enactment of 1984 supplemental appropriations requested by the Administration for the federal prison system and other law enforcement activities.

DISCUSSION

Conference agreement assumes that unspecified savings from the Grace Commission recommendations equal to $2.0 billion over 3 years can be achieved administratively.

Conference agreement assumes a funding amount for federal pay increases which is consistent with the assumptions in the Senate-passed resolution of a 3.5% pay increase each January. Conference report will state explicitly, however, that "the managers made no assumption concerning the rate or effective date of such pay raises."

Conference agreement assumes that the additional funds assumed in the House-passed resolution for entitlement programs would be switched to the functions in which the accounts for those entitlement programs are found. The same assumption is made for part of the additional funding for discretionary programs which was also originally assumed in the House-passed resolution in Function 920. The remainder of the additional funding for discretionary programs is not assumed in the conference agreement.

DISCUSSION

House receded to the Senate on Function 950.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I again thank the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES] for what he had done this year to permit us to be here today. I think he has given a pretty good analysis of how this process had worked. I only wish we could have done it sooner. Even, if we could have reached agreement 3 or 4 weeks ago and gotten the budget resolution in place, had all the appropriations bills on time this year. They were ready on both sides. But because of the defense debate, we are not going to be able to get all the individual bills passed.

I do wish to thank a couple of other people and remind the Senate of what is going on in other committees.

I would be remiss if I did not thank the Appropriations Committee and, in particular, Chairman HATFIELD and the ranking member on the minority side, Senator STENNIS, because essentially, what they have done in the appropriations process is to take the amounts for nondefense discretionary programs that were assumed in the Rose Garden strategy and agreed to be bound by them, and it is my understanding that to this point the Senate has adhered to these limits on the nondefense discretionary programs.

And this budget resolution, while it includes some compromises with the House of Representatives, will not alter in any way the position of the Appropriations Committee with reference to the amounts it has assigned to each of its subcommittees for their budget authority ceilings on nondefense discretionary programs.

So I think the Congress has done a very good job. The tax increases that are in this resolution have been enacted. The entitlement program levels that are in this resolution have been enacted. And if our success thus far on the appropriations holds, as I have just described, then we are very close to the $150 billion deficit reduction over the next 3 years, as I described it to the Senate some 15 minutes ago.

I think that is reasonably good work, considering all the diverse views and the nature of this particular year. I wish we could do better. I think there is much more to do. But I truly believe we will do in the next 5 or 6 months that which has to be done to get these deficits on a trend line moving downward significantly and credibly and with that I think we can look forward to a decade of significant growth in the economy with low inflation. I hope that will occur.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 5 or 6 minutes to me?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield such time as the Senator desires.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from the State of New Mexico whose diligence and courage have not only preserved a process but have resulted in a substance far more favorable than most expected in January of this year.

Mr. President, in confronting the budget resolution before us we face a glass that is either half full or half empty, depending upon whether one looks backward or forward in time.

I do think that we have some right to regard reaching this point—consideration of the conference report on the second concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985—as a real accomplishment. In the first place, we have made real, albeit incomplete, movement toward addressing the problem of large and growing budget deficits. Over the next 3 fiscal years, the Federal Government's deficits will at least be $100 to $150 billion smaller than they otherwise would be. This means that we will have $100 to $150 billion more in savings available for investment than would otherwise be the case; interest costs in the future will be correspondingly smaller, and our current interest rates and need for foreign capital are correspondingly less. In each of these areas, there is still much to be done. But in acknowledging the seriousness of the task before us, we should also acknowledge that what has been done is a real and genuine accomplishment.

Furthermore, this accomplishment is the more remarkable for its having come during a Presidential election year, and—candidly—one in which the political agendas of the two leading candidates for that position differ fairly substantially. Certainly, the election year made the task more difficult, and perhaps it limited what we were able to accomplish. But I believe we have demonstrated convincingly that election year politics do not necessarily paralyze Congress in this important area.

We are particularly indebted to the leadership for the work that they have put into this effort, and I am speaking of Members in both Houses, and on both sides of the aisle. In the last many days, Majority Leader BAKER and House Speaker O'NEILL have been personally involved in the negotiations. Certainly, also, the efforts of the distinguished chairmen of the Appropriations, Armed Services, Budget, and Finance Committees deserve special commendation, as do those of their counterparts in the minority party.

There is another reason why passage of this measure is important. We have preserved the integrity of the budget-making process and prevented an unwarranted and dangerous weakening of that process. It has been a close thing, I will not pretend that the victory is entirely untarnished. We in the Senate waived the Budget Act in order to consider four appropriations bills, and the House of Representatives took the unprecedented and, in my view, unwise step of waiving the Budget Act on all appropriations bills, prior even to consideration of a single one of those measures.

For forcing the Senate to confront the budget process we are indebted to the senior Senator from Florida, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Budget Committee.

Now, some have suggested that the distinguished Senator from Florida might have had some other motives in mind when he opposed consideration of spending bills prior to agreement on a budget. Perhaps he did. But I respect his defense of this process, and I think that in the future we will be grateful that this measure of discipline has been imposed upon us.

For these reasons, Mr. President, the glass is half full, and we should be pleased that this resolution is before us now.

A candid appraisal of the situation we now face, however, requires us to admit that our actions to date leave the glass half empty. Indeed, it would perhaps be more accurate to characterize this particular glass as mostly empty. For, unfortunately, the budget deficits which confront us over the next 3 years are five to six times as large as the size of the downpayment that this resolution represents. Even with this downpayment, the deficit is not on a downward course. Instead, it is projected to increase in each of the next 3 fiscal years, although at a rate less than would have been the case had we not made this downpayment.

It is incumbent upon us now to follow up this downpayment with a budget resolution next year that shows deficit reduction which is both larger than this year's and which puts the deficit on a clearly and significantly declining path.

We will have time enough for that debate next year. I have no desire to burden my colleagues at this time with debate on the fiscal 1986 budget. Certainly, however, this will be the No. 1 item on our agenda when we return in January.

In closing, then, I wish to commend again the diligent work of those Senators who made this agreement possible and to urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished senior Senator from Washington for his remarks.

His speech to the Senate reminded me once again to try to put into perspective the efforts of the distinguished senior Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES).

I heard him say that some wondered about the motives of the Senator from Florida when he began to hold up appropriation bills rather than grant the necessary Budget Act waivers permitting them to be considered. Frankly, I have concluded that Senator CHILES understood, and for that I am most grateful, the dilemma that we were in on this side.

Having negotiated with the President, he understood that we might have to go through three sets of negotiations because we did not have all the players, that is, all the participants, and the ultimate solution to the defense number. Hence, since he saw that——

Mr. CHILES. I understood your fear; I never particularly understood it was real.

Mr. DOMENICI. In fact, you said it might not be real, but you kind of understood they might think it was real.

The reason I mention this is because the distinguished senior Senator from Washington who just spoke had occasion to speak to me and to the distinguished Senator from Florida about the very issue we are discussing and the fact that maybe it was not too farfetched to see if we could get the leadership to sit down and talk to the respective committees.

Senator Chiles, as I indicated, did that. Some listened to him one day when he suggested it as the conference broke up, and, as we are prone to do around here, we thought it was a pipedream; it could not be done. "Are you serious, to get the leaders to sit down and talk about the defense and ultimately get the President and the appropriate committees to agree?"

It took a long time, but it got done. We are here. I think defense is adequately taken care of. It is resolved. We will probably get a defense appropriations bill. That is rather historic but, as I see it, rather necessary. Wherever one is on the defense issues, for less money or more money, clearly in a budget of its size we ought to get an appropriation bill and we probably will.

Having said that, I know of no one else that desires time on our side. I am not sure if the distinguished Senator from Florida needs any additional time on his side. If the Senator does not, we can put in a quorum call and inquire.

Mr. CHILES. I think it would be a good idea to put in a quorum call and let me check.

Mr. DOMENICI. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CHILES. If the Senator would withhold on that, I want to join with the Senator from New Mexico in saying that the Senator from Washington has always played a valuable role in the Budget Committee process and certainly did in this instance. Because I think he did help bring to my attention this fear that was out there. And the fear was very real. Whether it was based on something more than a fear, I do not know. But it was certainly real.

I will have to say that I did not appreciate it at the time because I had said over and over on this floor that I could not understand why we could not come to an agreement on the number if we were looking at a difference of how to resolve a $13 billion difference. But when I began to appreciate that that was a feeling that that would only be a ceiling and not a floor, then we had something which we could work on.

So I thank the Senator from Washington for helping to educate the Senator from Florida on that fear that was out there.

Mr. DOMENICI. Before I renew my request for a quorum call, let me say that I was thankful when the Senator from Florida finally arrived at a point when he understood that this side had some genuine concerns. Because prior to that, it was pretty difficult, in the conferences, for me to just sit there and get beat about the head. Once he realized that we had this problem, we proceeded to resolve the problem and ended up yesterday finding a solution. It was a lot easier once he understood the problems that I had and the dilemma that I was confronted with. For that, I thank you both.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUDMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments by our colleagues. I also appreciate the diligence, patience, and persistence that they have had in bringing this issue to the floor and especially the trouble, long hours, and difficulties that have arisen during the budget conference.

I wish to ask a couple of questions. I did not see the table that the Senator placed into the RECORD, but I am concerned about what it contains. The Senator mentioned that this would reduce the deficits by, I believe, $149 billion over the next 3 years. Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct. The table that I placed in the RECORD is a total deficit reduction over the years 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987 of $149.2 billion a reduction from the current law in effect at the beginning of the year.

Mr. NICKLES. Out of that $149 billion, how much of that is savings in 1985, 1986, and 1987?

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator mean outlay reductions on the expenditure side for the 4 years?

Mr. NICKLES. I now have a copy of the table. The total deficit reduction—correct me if I am wrong—would be almost $24 billion in 1985, $49 billion in 1986, and $75 billion in 1987.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. So most of the savings is in the outyears and not very much for next year?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct; $23.9 billion, $49.8 billion, and $75 billion.

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator might refresh my memory, we already passed a tax increase. That was about $49 billion or $50 billion of that deficit reduction.

Mr. DOMENICI. If the Senator will refer to the table, the very first line, over the 4 years, it is $50.8 billion.

Mr. NICKLES. So out of the total reduction, one-third of it was a tax increase?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. And the remaining two-thirds would be the spending reductions. But those spending reductions are not spending reductions from fiscal year 1984 only, they are spending reductions over what we anticipate spending would be from 1984 through 1987?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. I am looking at the other table now. When we talk about deficit reductions, we are talking about what we anticipate the expenditures would be had we done nothing. I would like to point out that the total amount of spending would increase from $845 billion in outlays in 1984, to $932 billion in 1985, an increase of almost $90 billion, and then from 1985 to 1986 an increase of about $70 billion. Outlays increase again in 1987 about $85 billion.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. A lot of times when we talk about deficit reductions and spending reductions, we find that Federal spending continues to escalate at an average of over $80 billion a year, which we have happened for some time.

I have one additional question. In the Senate package that we passed, if this Senator's memory is correct, we had $50 billion in tax increases and about $45 billion in defense and $45 billion in nondefense savings. Out of these total outlays that we will save over the next 3 years, is more of that in defense or nondefense, or is it fairly equal?

Mr. DOMENICI. It is about 60–40 defense-nondefense. The defense reduction has gone up because the three bodies, the House, Senate, and the President, have agreed to a lower defense number than was originally passed by the Senate.

Mr. NICKLES. I am looking at the Senator's table. Correct me if I am wrong, but I see out of this $145 billion that we will save over the next 3 years, $50 billion is a tax increase, so we will have spending reductions of $100 billion; $58 billion of that $100 billion is in defense.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. $58 billion is the reduction in defense spending; entitlements, $12 billion; nondefense discretionary, $3.9 billion. So we are looking at a total of $16 billion in nondefense savings and $58 billion in defense savings.

Mr. DOMENICI. There is also $5.7 billion in offsetting receipts.

Mr. NICKLES. Offsetting receipts? Those are tax increases.

Mr. DOMENICI. No; these are primarily savings recommended by the Grace Commission which Congress has adopted.

Mr. NICKLES. So I will modify my figures. We have $58 billion in defense cuts and $12.2 billion for entitlements and $4 billion for nondefense discretionary and another $6 billion in offsetting receipts. That is a total of $22 billion in nondefense.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. So out of the $100 billion in spending cuts, we cut $58 billion out of defense and $22 billion from nondefense.

Again, I understand the Senator had a very difficult time.

Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield such time to the Senator as he desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, a lot of us have been wrestling with this budget resolution. I have heard a lot of Senators say this is great, we are seeing the budget process work. We talk about going all the way back to 1974, since the Budget Act was enacted. Mr. President, I would say as a Senator who has been here only 4 years, that the progress we have seen on the Budget Act leaves a lot to be desired. A lot of us have been talking in the Senate, particularly in the last several months, about the need for congressional reform of the Senate rules and maybe the House rules as well, but I submit to you that this is living proof of the fact that we have a lot of work yet to do. A lot of people say this is better than doing nothing, but if you look at the process, it is not working very well. It is estimated we will have a budget deficit this year of $172 billion. That is not quite as much as last year. It was $195 billion last year. They say we are making progress, but if you look at it and look through the figures, you will see in 1985 we will have a budget deficit of $181 billion. If you look at 1986, we are looking at $192 billion. In 1987, we are looking at $207 billion. So deficits are not declining but they are increasing.

We still have a lot of work to do. There is a lot of reform that needs to be done and a lot of it will have to be done in Congress.

A lot of people wave the flag and say, "These are Ronald Reagan's deficits," but I think most people in the Senate know better.

Our office counted up over 74 programs that increase automatically without any new congressional authorizations. It is not a very fiscally sound policy to operate in that manner.

I think we have substantial problems. I think we have had them ever since 1974 and before that time. The Budget Act itself has not solved those problems.

I do expect the budget resolution to be adopted today.

Maybe the Senator will answer this question: I have a little suspicion that maybe the House was interested in moving the budget resolution because coupled with the budget resolution they would not have to vote for the debt limit increase, which is politically very sensitive. Would the Senator care to respond to that?

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not know about that. Actually, I think the House had about given up on the prospect of a budget resolution this year, so I do not think they were counting on it. They thought we were in the ditch, to borrow an expression from the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, the former chairman and ranking minority member of the committee. I think they are probably pleased that the Gephardt rule exists. But I really do not know anything about their motives.

Mr. NICKLES. Is the Senator correct that if they did not pass the budget resolution, then the Senate would be forced and they would be forced to deal with the difficult political issue of whether or not to raise the debt limit? They would have to have an up-or-down vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. The answer to that is yes, the House would be forced into an up-or-down vote. In the Senate we will have to vote on debt limit regardless of what we do on the budget resolution.

Mr. NICKLES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, in summation, I am going to vote against this budget resolution. I do not know that it makes a lot of difference whether it passes or not. Supposedly, it is going to reduce the deficit by $149 billion, but as I said earlier, those deficits will continue to increase.

What will it do? It raises taxes $50 billion and we have already done that. It has offsetting receipts of $5.7 billion for the Grace Commission proposals and they have already been done.

What else does it do? It cuts defense $58 billion. What does it do in nondefense? Maybe $22 billion in reductions.

So over the next 3 years, when you are looking at total expenditures of $932 billion in 1985, then over $1 trillion in 1986, and almost $1.1 trillion in 1987, the savings that we make in nondefense of $22 billion are very minuscule, I do not think we have accomplished very much so far as saying that we are helping our country toward economic recovery. We may be doing the opposite. We may be trying in escalations through open-end Federal programs.

People are saying, "Yes, we can pass this appropriations bill because it is within the budget."

Well, the budget is not very good if you have deficits of $180 billion. We have passed only 4 appropriations bills out of 13 and we will run several through in the next few days. Again, it is not a very sound way to run a country or these agencies.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I know the distinguished junior Senator from Oklahoma is very concerned about the deficit, and I think he knows that I share that concern.

I would just suggest to my good friend I do not believe that one can conclude that large deficits are the result of any process. Clearly, you cannot do better than the collective will of Member of the House and Senate coupled with the President regarding what they want to do, with or without a process.

The appropriations bills are going to pass this year, separately or as part of the continuing resolution. If you want some kind of check on them before they are finally finished, you ought to have a budget resolution. The four that have passed were passed by overwhelming margins. I believe the remaining ones will pass with overwhelming margins. Frankly, I think they will pass because of the prudence of the Congress.

I do not think there is a simple way to reduce deficits. Deficits will not go down until the House and Senate join with the President and agree on what must be done. All we can do in the budget process is to reflect the collective wisdom and will of the Congress.

We tried our best, I say to the Senator. In 4 years, we will have reduced what the budget deficits would have been by somewhere between $400 billion and $470 billion. That does not mean we cut from year to year. But without the budget process and the discipline of the annual budget resolutions, the deficits would be much worse. Earlier I indicated that Rudy Penner, Director of CBO, indicates that with this year's work, which is reflected in this budget resolution, we have reduced the deficit as a percent of GNP from 5.4 percent to 4.5 percent in 1987. That may not seem like a lot, but 1 percent of GNP is a significant amount.

I respect the Senator's judgment and what he is going to do on this resolution with the same kind of respect I have for the Senator's decisions on anything here. But not to pass this resolution after all that has gone into it in the hope that we will get something better, is not realistic. This may not be the best of all possible worlds, but clearly we will be better off if we pass this resolution and try to get something better next year.

I really hope that the Senator will reconsider and that we can pass this forthwith and get on with other business. But clearly, we will accommodate whatever the Senator desires.

Does the Senator from New Hampshire desire time?

(Mr. GORTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. RUDMAN. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. RUDMAN. Just a question.

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I would like to address the question to both the chairman and the ranking member. It is a question asked in utter good faith. I intend to support the position of the committee, but I am really troubled by something here. Someplace in the record, there ought to be some comment. I see the distinguished Democratic leader on the floor and knowing his comments about the Constitution, which I have paid great attention to over the past 4 years, I have a question I shall put in the record. Somebody may answer it, but at some point, I believe somebody else is going to answer it and it may not be the answer.

I am looking at a document entitled "Rule XLIX. Establishment of Statutory Limit on the Public Debt." That is a rule of the House of Representatives. A rule of the House of Representatives obviously need not be approved by the Senate and need not be signed by the President. In a very unique way that must have been thought up by a battery of Philadelphia lawyers—and I say that in no disrespect to the State of Pennsylvania—there is incorporation by reference of an extension of the debt limit. If I read the record correctly, what has happened here is that the House of Representatives has first adopted this rule, then has adopted the budget resolution, which in no way incorporates the debt limit extension, but refers by indirection, if you will, to the rule. That now comes before this body. We assume we will pass it. It is my understanding that upon passing the Senate, it will go to the President. Or will it go back to the House?

Mr. DOMENICI. What is the Senator referring to, the debt limit bill or this?

Mr. RUDMAN. This.

Mr. DOMENICI. This goes to the House, and the President does not sign it.

Mr. RUDMAN. No signature whatsoever is needed?

Mr. DOMENICI. But they have to pass it.

Mr. RUDMAN. They have to pass it?

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, my question is, if it is going to have the power of law, is it now possible to incorporate by reference a rule which is not acted on by the other body and have it considered constitutionally as part of the Budget Act?

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me say that in 1979, the House adopted something called the Gephardt rule, which is what the Senator is referring to. I cannot give an answer to the question the Senator just asked, but let me tell him what they do.

It is their process, not ours. But because of that rule, the House is deemed to have passed a debt limit bill when Congress completes action on the budget resolution. It comes to the Senate, where we pass it or not. We frequently amend it and sent it back to them and they are then forced to vote on the amended bill. We have done that a couple of times. Eventually, the debt limit bill gets adopted and goes to the President for signature. So that is a bill that is signed by the President.

The Senate has not chosen to do it that way. When the bill comes over from the House, it goes to the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction. It is reported out and passed like any other bill in the Senate.

Mr. RUDMAN. Am I correct in assuming, then, that although a debt limit bill will go to the President for signature—a debt limit extension will go to the President and that will have been affirmatively acted on by the U.S. Senate in a record vote, the only House action in relation to that extension will be the incorporation by reference of that debt limit contained in this budget resolution?

Mr. DOMENICI. It will be affirmatively acted upon by the Senate, by record vote on voice vote. The Senate has no procedure to incorporate by reference.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I just want to say for the record to my friend from New Mexico, who is not the author of this, nor is the Senator from Florida, that I would be willing to stake a little bet with somebody that if somebody who wanted to cause a little havoc with the affairs of the country and wanted to go to the U.S. district court and contest the validity of this kind of measure, in my view, they would succeed for a whole number of reasons which I shall not bore this body with. I think we ought to be very careful about letting this scheme be used in the future on a whole number of pieces of legislation or we are going to end up in a political advantage or disadvantage, however you look at it, where one House or another is not going to act on a matter which the Constitution requires them to act on; yet that matter will be signed into law by the President. That ought to be looked at by somebody, and I simply raise it for that purpose.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank my good friend. I will say that during the past year the House has had to act several times on a regular debt limit bill because last year we adopted a debt level that did not extend over the full year. They ultimately passed a bill each time. I am not sure how. That is their business, not mine. But I do not know that that has anything to do with this resolution. The Senator raises a good point and I assume some people will be looking at it.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUDMAN). The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I withhold that request.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I wish to make clear my position on House Concurrent Resolution 280, the first concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1985. I oppose the budget conference report and am unalterably opposed to any budget resolution that increases, rather than decreases the budget deficit.

This budget agreement provides for a deficit of $181 billion in fiscal year 1985, $193 billion in fiscal year 1986, and $208 billion in fiscal year 1987. These deficits are damaging to all elements of our economy and indeed threaten our economic future. They must be reduced and wiped out.

In contrast to the budget agreement, I have offered for the past 3 years a budget freeze plan that would eliminate the Federal deficit. I continue to strongly believe that my freeze plan is the best way to wipe out the staggering deficits.

As a Budget Committee conferee, I signed the conference report since it was the only way the report could be filed. In no way should this be construed as my endorsement of the conference agreement. I remain firmly opposed to deficit Federal spending and I am committed to balancing the budget as soon as possible. I intend to offer my budget freeze plan at the first opportunity in order to give the Senate a chance to act responsibly and restore fiscal integrity to the budget process.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Florida yield me time?

Mr. CHILES. I wonder if the distinguished Senator would allow us to take care of this matter and then give him time? If we could dispose of this matter, then I suggest he may have the floor after that.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I expect to be recognized after the vote is taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will certainly observe the normal rules of procedure, including recognizing the Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York be recognized immediately following the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHILES. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. CHILES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

PRESIDENT REAGAN MISREPRESENTS FACTS ON U.S. INTELLIGENCE IN CARTER ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, Helen Thomas of the UPI reports that in Bowling Green, OH, today, President Reagan "blamed the 'near destruction of our intelligence agency' during the Carter years for what he said was a breakdown in intelligence against terrorists."

This statement is not only false, it is reckless. The President has all but invited further terrorist attacks on American lives by telling the world we are unprepared to thwart such attacks. The statement undermines, I am prepared to say betrays, almost a decade of sustained bipartisan efforts in the Congress to reconstruct an intelligence community whose budgets had run down steadily through the first half of the 1970's and only began to rise sharply in the second half. Former Deputy Director of Central Intelligence Admiral Bobby Inman spoke of the extent of this decline—which occurred during Republican as well as Democratic administrations—to the American Newspaper Publishers Association on April 27, 1982:

> The intelligence establishment was cut back sharply in the 1960s and 1970s after a major buildup in the 1950s, losing 40 percent of its personnel from 1964 to the mid-1970s.

Intelligence budgets are classified. But their direction is not. Or is not now that the President has utterly misrepresented the facts. The intelligence community budget declined during each of the early years of the 1970's. With the first full year of the Carter administration, fiscal year 1978, this decline stopped. In fiscal year 1979, which began October 1, 1978, the budget of the intelligence community, including that of the Central Intelligence Agency, rose for the first time in that decade. It rose again in fiscal year 1980, which began October 1, 1979. It rose again in fiscal year 1981, which began October 1, 1980. And finally it rose again in the budget for fiscal year 1982, which President Carter submitted to Congress in January 1981.

This comes to four consecutive Carter budgets in which more funds were requested for intelligence. May I add that the Intelligence Committees fully agreed with these requests and they were granted.

The most important development of the Carter years was the replacement of our technical means of collection—the foundation for nuclear defense and the indispensable element of nuclear arms control. These changes set in motion under the previous administration are now just becoming operational and with great and important consequences. Or those of us hope who continue to hope for arms control agreements and in the meantime insist on adequate defense measures.

I will not characterize to the Senate my view either of the reasons for the President's statement or the way in which it should be viewed. But I must tell you that the administration has done this before. I am telling you through clinched teeth that in the aftermath of the massacre of our marines in Beirut, this same charge was made. I read you the headline from the New York Times: "White House Contends Carter Crippled CIA." A similar story appeared in the Wall Street Journal on January 31, 1984.

One such story may be an accident. Two is a campaign.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these two articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 29, 1983]

WHITE HOUSE CONTENDS CARTER CRIPPLED CIA

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 27 (AP). A White House spokesman said today that failures in intelligence-gathering in connection with the Beirut bombing could be attributed to decisions of the Carter Administration that crippled the Central Intelligence Agency.

The spokesman, Larry Speakes, was commenting on the intelligence section of the Long Commission report.

The report, without mentioning the Administration of President Carter, said the intelligence failure was "in large part due to policy decisions which have resulted in a United States human intelligence capability commensurate with the resources and time that have been spent on it."

Mr. Speakes said:

"We don't quarrel with the fact that the C.I.A. and other intelligence-gathering agencies have been crippled by decisions of the previous Administration; and we are in the process of rebuilding capabilities. But it takes time to re-establish our intelligence-gathering methods."

CIA Is Expanding Anti-Terrorism Effort But Lacks Data From Inside the Groups

(By David Ignattus)

Washington. The Central Intelligence Agency is working with friendly countries to create a new anti-terrorism network, but the effort may be hampered by a lack of inside information about the growing array of terrorist groups.

The anti-terrorism effort was described yesterday by an authoritative government source in an upbeat summary of CIA expansion during the first three years of the Reagan administration. The source's message likely to be repeated during President Reagan's reelection campaign, is that a revived CIA is back in business around the world.

But despite the source's claims of improved CIA performance during Mr. Reagan's administration, terrorism has been a black eye for the agency. The CIA's failure to warn about bomb attacks against the U.S. Embassy and Marine headquarters in Beirut had many causes, including the loss of agents in Iran and in the Palestine Liberation Organization in the past, several years. The U.S., for the moment, is dependent largely on other intelligence services, such as those of Israel, Jordan and Lebanon, which often lack detailed information from inside the terrorist groups.

The CIA has received additional funding and staffing recently. The Reagan administration has increased the agency's staff including a restoration of 800 positions in the clandestine service that were cut during the Carter administration the source said. He added the agency has more stations overseas, more case officers, more agents, more analytical reports and better relations with foreign intelligence services.

The new anti-terrorism network appears to be based largely on a greater exchange of information with friendly intelligence services in the Middle East and Europe. The U.S. also has developed its own counterterrorism strike force of 100 to 150 people, based in the Defense Department, as well as smaller CIA teams to deal with terrorist incidents.

To coordinate the increasing flow of information about terrorism, the CIA also has established a new evaluation center that can handle human electronic and other intelligence data. Establishment of such a terrorism-information center was recommended strongly by a Pentagon commission that investigated last October's bomb attack against U.S. Marines in Beirut. The source said the CIA's station in Beirut is now in contact with the Marines there as often as several times a day about potential threats.

The authoritative government official, who spoke on the condition he wouldn't be identified, discussed a range of intelligence issues facing the U.S. The highlights:

—The CIA believes the Soviet Union is developing the capability for a nationwide missile-defense system. The source said evidence of Soviet preparation for such a system includes laser research, the construction of six large radar complexes, the development of an anti-aircraft missile system that also could help shoot down U.S. balistic missiles and the establishment of new military production lines.

—The CIA is supporting actively 12,000 to 15,000 Nicaraguan rebels in their war against the Sandinista government. But the number of CIA officers involved in this covert war program is slightly more than 20 people, rather than the 500 estimated in some newspaper reports, the source said. The CIA believes the anti-Sandinista campaign has been effective, but it doubts the rebels will overthrow the Nicaraguan government, he said. While CIA involvement in Nicaragua long has been known, the source's comments are the most detailed information provided by the government.

—The U.S. also appears to be helping at least indirectly, anti-government forces in Afghanistan and Kampuchea, the source indicated. He said in these two countries, and in Angola, pro-Soviet regimes are facing growing resistance.

—The CIA plans to leave to Italian authorities the issue of Bulgaria's alleged role in the 1981 assassination attempt against Pope John Paul II. The source said the trial of Mehmet Ali Agea will show a high degree of Bulgarian involvement, leading to a strong suspicion that Soviet intelligence also was involved. But he said the Soviet link probably never will be proved, and that U.S. efforts to publicize the issue might be counterproductive.

—The CIA has increased sharply its analytical staff and output, the source said. After losing about half its analysts between 1978 and 1980, largely through budget cuts and retirement, the agency has added 400 to 450 analysts in the past three years. Moreover, the agency currently produces about 50 "national intelligence estimates" on foreign developments each year, compared with 12 annually during the Carter administration.

—To guard against political surprises abroad, the CIA is producing a new quarterly report on political instability in 30 important countries, the source said. The quarterly reports, studying long-term political trends, supplement the CIA's weekly "watch reports" on current intelligence.

—The Soviet intelligence service KGB, is on the defensive because of careful U.S. counterintelligence operations source asserted. Last year, 147 KGB agents were expelled, were arrested or detained in Western countries, he said. As a national source said, the KGB's own counterintelligence department appears to be supervising KGB operations more closely to protect more agents from being recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Accordingly, I wrote Mr. Casey on February 2, 1984, stating that this was wholly unacceptable and that the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence took the charge with the utmost seriousness. My letter read as follows:

Hon. William J. Casey,
Director of Central Intelligence, Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, DC.

Dear Bill: I am sure you were appalled, as I was, by the hemorrhage of classified information concerning the CIA which appeared in The Wall Street Journal on Tuesday. All ascribed to an "authoritative government source."

I assume you are investigating the matter. Would it be useful for our Committee to hold a hearing? I cannot believe that a loyal officer would release such sensitive information. This kind of thing must be stopped.

Another disquieting element is the seeming effort to politicize the Agency. According to the Wall Street Journal, the "authoritative government source" gave an "upbeat summary of the CIA's expansion during the first 3 years of the Reagan administration." The report continued:

The source's message, likely to be repeated during President Reagan's reelection campaign, is that a revived CIA is back in business around the world.

May I interject, Mr. President, to say the campaign has a slightly different version. The CIA evidently is not revived because of something that was not done in the previous administration.

This is unacceptable. It comes on the heels of a statement by White House spokesman Larry Speakes, commenting on the intelligence section of the Long Commission Report, that the Carter administration had crippled the Central Intelligence Agency. The New York Times put it thus:

White House Contends Carter Crippled CIA

. . . Mr. Speakes said: "We don't quarrel with the fact that the CIA and other intelligence-gathering agencies have been crippled by decisions of the previous Administration, and we are in the process of rebuilding capabilities. But it takes time to reestablish our intelligence-gathering methods."

Now, you know and I know that this is not true. The decline of American human intelligence began in the mid-1960's with the advent and cost associated with the Vietnam War. The trend accelerated in the early 1970's as the decision was made to pay for new technologies by reducing manpower. If there was any crippling done, it was done by a succession of administrations. Democratic and Republic alike.

These sorts of denunciations pose a genuine danger to the bipartisan spirit of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence that has contributed so much to the growth of congressional support for the Agency over the past 8 years.

In that space of time, the number of persons at the Agency has only grown a little bit by the calculations of our budget officer. You went from [deleted] persons in fiscal 1977 to [deleted] in fiscal 1983. A modest increase. But the overall budget during that period has more than doubled. The budget has in fact gone up every year since fiscal 1977. In his nomination hearing, John McMahon stated that the real increase began in 1979, although it seems to me to have begun earlier.

Might I ask you to let me know what the Agency is doing to investigate the source of this leak, or hemorrhage, as I choose to put it?

I cannot overstate the seriousness with which I take this issue and how important it is to me, and other members of the committee, to find out what is going on.

Now, Mr. President, that letter was written February 2. The Director of the Agency was out of the country for a bit. He replied to me on March 8 as follows:

THE DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, DC, March 8, 1984.

Hon. DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
Vice Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR PAT: Thanks for your letter of February 2nd which I found upon my return from a long trip. As I told you over the telephone, I was very unhappy about the article in The Wall Street Journal. I am particularly pained about the suggestion that one "Agency's revival" will be a partisan political theme in the reelection campaign. Of course, the closest reading of The Wall Street Journal story establishes that the only authority for that is the author's speculation. I can assure you that neither I nor the Agency will be a part of any such thing. I've checked and have been assured that there is no intention to go out to make any such issue.

All of us know that the increase in the personnel and budgetary strength of the Agency began in 1979, that it was planned and proposed earlier, and that it cannot be completed without strong bi-partisan support. I fully share your conviction that the vital functioning of this Agency cannot be risked or impaired through any use of CIA for partisan political purposes. The protection of our national security, to which both this Agency and your committee are so firmly committed, is too important a mission to subject to the vagaries of the political process or the partisan purposes of either party.

As the Agency noted last year in transmitting its 1984 Intelligence Authorization Act, we must "capitalize on the significant steps which the executive and legislative branches have taken together toward revitalization of our nation's Intelligence Community, [and] we must insure sufficient resources in fiscal year 1984 to continue building the intelligence capabilities needed to meet the challenges of the late 1980's and beyond." As this letter further notes, it is only through the bi-partisan support of Congress that the Agency can continue to stay "firmly on the path of progress which we have charted together." You have my assurance that I will not tolerate any attempt to politicize the Agency or its work, or use the fact of its revitalization for partisan political purposes. Any such use of the Agency would be damaging to the trust and confidence that must exist between your committee and this Agency, and must be avoided in the interest of maintaining an effective Congressional relationship which will serve as the continuing basis for maintaining and building the intelligence capabilities required for both today and the future.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM J. CASEY.

Mr. President, this is not a classified letter. I repeat the Director's statement: "You have my assurance that I will not tolerate any attempt to politicize the Agency or its work, or use the fact of its revitalization for partisan political purposes."

Finally, Mr. President, on Friday, September 20, the day of the most recent bombing of an American installation in Beirut, I was interviewed on WNBC News, the New York NBC station, on its news program, "Live at Five," by the distinguished correspondent Gabe Pressman. After I answered his questions as to what was known about the most recent horror, Mr. Pressman asked me, "Do you think this is going to be a political issue?" This was 6 days ago. This was my reply:

I hope not. This is not something any American could divide on. I was in Beirut in January. If you see what our people go through over there, you've just got to be for them, regardless of what's going on here. But I would wish that maybe some time Americans who hear about people who serve in the diplomatic or foreign service would remember what, in fact, that life is like, and maybe say hello to one of them the next time they see one.

Mr. President, I believe an apology is in order and that if none is forthcoming, a motion of censure is in order.

I repeat, in summary: Today, the President, in Bowling Green, OH, blamed what he called the "near destruction of our intelligence agency" during the Carter years for the breakdown in intelligence against terrorists leading to the recent bombing in Beirut.

As it happened, it was 1 year ago, in October, that the massacre at the marine barracks took place, and exactly the same charge was made on December 29. I read the New York Times headline: "White House Contends Carter Crippled CIA."

I wrote Mr. Casey. He replied that, of course, this was unwarranted and unjustified and, "You have my assurance that I will not tolerate any attempt to politicize the Agency or its work."

He said that in no sense would he allow this to become part of, nor will it be, a partisan political scene in the reelection campaign.

Mr. President, not only do I think this body is entitled to an apology; I think the Director of the CIA is entitled to an apology. He did not say these things. They were said twice now from the White House—Mr. Speakes in one case and the President in another.

I ask if this is acceptable conduct, if this is what America is about. I ask if this does not put in jeopardy exactly the kind of bipartisan support that has brought about the rebuilding of the intelligence community and to which we have devoted ourselves—perhaps that is a self-serving word—to which we have applied ourselves in silence in this building, under that dome, day after day, week after week, year after year. I have served on this committee 8 years and as provided by the Senate's rules, will be going off in the next Congress.

When that charge was made, it was my responsibility to ask Mr. Casey if it were so. He said it was not so. Now it is ghastly, it is ghoulish, in the aftermath of another American tragedy, to blame it on the previous administration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator Yield?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New York for bringing this to the attention of the Senate. I hope that the Senator has already asked to put into the RECORD the wire story in this regard.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I have not done that.

Mr. BYRD. For the President to suggest that the most recent terrorist disaster in Lebanon is Jimmy Carter's fault is the ultimate disappearing act. Where has the President been for the last 4 years; and if Mr. Reagan has not been President for the last 4 years, then who has been?

It is one thing to be able to stage manage walking away from these disasters. But it is quite another thing to try to leave an impression that it did not even happen on your watch.

I thank the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the wire story to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(By Helen Thomas)

BOWLING GREEN, OH. (UPI).—President Reagan said Wednesday he hopes to open a dialogue with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to "clear the air" of the mutual suspicions of aggression that poison U.S.-Soviet relations. The president made the remark at Bowling Green State University after he discarded a portion of his prepared address on foreign policy to take some questions from the students.

Earlier, thousands of cheering, sign-waving welcomers gave Reagan one of the most rousing receptions since he kicked off his re-election campaign.

"It's an understatement for me to say at this moment that it's great to be here," Reagan said to cheers at the pep-rally type gathering.

There were a few discordant notes. One protester hurled a tomato, well off the mark, at Reagan's helicopter after it landed on campus. And a group of protesters carried signs describing the President's policies as "inhumane," but failed to gain entrance to the crowded gymnasium where Reagan spoke.

Reagan took nine questions from the crowd and said that when he meets with Gromyko at the White House on Friday:

"It is my hope that maybe we can open up a dialogue about the suspicions that exist in both our countries—they charging that we intend war against them. We feel, I think with better reason, that they really do have aggressive intent against us."

The President said that his meeting with the Kremlin leader may "open up a dialogue and may clear the air of those suspicions."

"It's time for us to sit down together in a joint discussion," Reagan said.

Taking questions from students that authorities said were chosen at randown, Reagan also said he plans to step up security at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut but added, "an embassy is not a bunker and you can't fortify it."

The President blamed the "near destruction of our intelligence agency" during the Carter years for what he said was a breakdown in intelligence against terrorists.

Reagan also said the United States has no intention of quitting its diplomatic posts in Beirut. "The alternative would be to close down and to come back (to) Fortress America," Reagan said. "and that we will not do."

In his Bowling Green speech, Reagan referred to the difficulties the United States and Soviet Union have had in their efforts to reach agreement on weapons.

"The truth of the nuclear age is that there are no cheap solutions, no easy answers," he said. "The only path to progress on this is the open door; the honest proposal; the eagerness to talk—and hopeful waiting."

Reagan said his administration has pursued a policy of "firmness and steadiness" that he believes has had "a stabilizing effect on the world."

"But the world is a dangerous place," Reagan said. "We must be strong enough and confident enough to be patient when provoked. But we must be equally clear that past a certain point, our adversaries push us at their peril. Uncle Sam is a friendly old man. But he has a spine of steel."

Reagan noted that the United States has reached economic agreements with the Soviets and that a more sophisticated "hot line" has been set up between Moscow and Washington.

Of the effort to reach substantial agreements with the Soviets, Reagan said, "We are trying—and we are confident, eventually, of success. We must keep the door open, hope it will be entered and wait in an attitude of hopeful composure."

Noting that the United States in recent years has developed much friendlier relations with China, he said, "it shows our willingness to improve relations with countries that are ideologically very different from our own."

Later in Canton, Ohio, Reagan toured the Timken Co. Faircrest steel plant and denounced Mondale's proposed tax increases and quotas on steel imports.

In his remarks to workers, Reagan said that "a blunderbuss approach of quotas and trade barriers—encouraging stagnation by stifling competition is not the way to a better future—it's a giant step back into the misery of a failed past."

The President promised "aggressive enforcement" of his decision to ensure that the United States retaliates against countries that make use of "unfair and illegal subsidies" to dump their industrial products on U.S. markets.

"My opponent made raising taxes his No. 1 issue, the option he would use first in solving our country's problems," Reagan said.

"My first option is expanding economic growth and increasing opportunity. I say let's not focus on dividing the pie. Let's pull together and make a bigger pie, so everybody can have a bigger slice."

"We're leaving the pessimists and the doom-and-gloomers behind," Reagan said, "the old idea that spawned inflation, stagnation and national self-doubt, only a few years ago have given way to a new philosophy. Americans are rejecting the policy of something for nothing, rejecting politicians who try to divide us by exploiting envy, and who offer programs with the claim: we'll tax somebody else to pay for it."

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I have some brief comments, but I ask unanimous consent that they be included in another part of the RECORD. I do not want to associate these comments with the comments of the distinguished Senator from New York. I agree with his comments generally.

THE BEIRUT BOMBING

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I allude now to the incident of the Beirut bombing and would like to throw a little light on that, as to what has really occurred and has been occurring.

The distinguished former Senator from Nevada, my good friend Howard Cannon, is seated here. I remember that in January 1979, Senator Cannon and I and others followed President Carter's visit to Tehran, the capital of Iran.

We called on the Shah at that time, and visited with him for hours. We had quite a group of Senators in our entourage: Senator Jackson and Senator Javits, Senator STEVENS, the Senator from Nevada, Senator Cannon myself, and others. We talked to Ambassador Sullivan, who was our Ambassador at that time. We asked numerous questions relative to the continued stability of the country of Iran, particularly since the Shah had been known to be quite ill. And he said: "Don't worry about Iran. There are a few little dissident things, but there is not anything to really think about or worry about."

It was then about 4 to 5 weeks later that Ambassador Sullivan himself was seized, along with the Embassy, and it was an embarrassing moment for all Americans.

As the chairman of the State, Justice, Commerce Subcommittee on Appropriations, charged with the security of our Embassy facilities overseas, I was mindful of the fact that not only did this occur in Tehran but that there was a seizure and burning in Pakistan and, of course, the one in Libya, all at about the same time.

That caused quite an alarm, and we brought the State Department before us, and we told them, "You cannot have Fortress America built in every land around the world. You must depend upon the local security forces but there must be sufficient security to withstand any kind of demonstration—under the normal circumstances of 2 to 3 hours by any terrorist group or others—that would want to seize your Embassy facilities. You need such time so you can destroy your classified papers, correspondence, what cryptography there may be, and other vital material of a security nature. Give all our Embassies around the world a 2-to-3-hour breathing period, and then of course if you are overwhelmed and you are not helped by the local security forces then we are in tough circumstances but that is understandable."

But this casual "you cannot defend yourselves against terrorism" kind of situation that occurred in Beirut last week in absolutely unforgiveable.

Along that line, there is one thing to understand. When we had former Secretary of State Vance before us in hearings, he was awfully careful to state that we should not look provocative and destabilizing. That is the mentality that persists in our Department of State. They think that if they look lovable and friendly that everybody is going to be lovable and friendly to them. That is not the real world in which we live. When our Embassy in Iran was seized again that same year by a high school group in a 15-minute period in September, then we really read the riot act to them. We had them before us, and sure enough, the State Department said: "Well, we did certain things.

We appropriated an extra $35 million to make sure that we made these facilities secure in these awfully sensitive or subject-to-terrorism kind of spots.

In reading that riot act, you guessed it, they said it would be provocative and destabilizing to really make us appear secure. They do not understand that in situations like Beirut we are in a war zone. Our distinguished Commander in Chief, President Reagan, does not understand. He is big on religion. Well, he should understand the religion of Islam, whereby if you die for your country, you go immediately to heaven. We have a President who is keen on religion but not keen on understanding the several religions. His lack of understanding shows most clearly when he states that a person who would drive in a truck of that kind and blow up the so-called enemy's facility is not worthwhile of humanity or living in the human race. I am rather embarrassed by the President's statement and his lack of understanding. War is war.

Now I read that the State Department wants $372 million for securing facilities around the world. The request is too late. The problem with the State Department's inability to provide security is not a problem of money, it's a problem of mentality. Our people can't even recognize the problem nor the enemy.

I remember in World War II that if we had a soldier who could blow up the enemy's headquarters or his whole command center into kingdom come—and there are many of them who went on such missions and who did not come back—that they were the best of frontline soldiers.

In talking about soldiers, having been in command, you never allow your troops to get into this kind of security situation. In the heat of a hot war you do not put them in a position of exposure where they would give their lives in a totally defenseless situation.

I wish, Mr. President, that everyone could read the article this morning of George F. Will in the Washington Post entitled, "The Beirut Bombing: Someone Should Resign."

I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD, as it expresses in the most eloquent way my feelings on this particular score.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 26, 1984]

THE BEIRUT BOMBING: SOMEONE SHOULD RESIGN

(By George F. Will)

Humor me. Consider a naive theory and a utopian proposal. The theory is: there is so much failure in government because there are insufficient penalties for failure. The proposal is: when there is serious failure, someone serious should resign.

These heresies are provoked by the third truck bombing in Beirut, and by statements of U.S. officials who seem to relish making irrelevant remarks. The Secretary of State, for example, has said: Well, embassies must be open, transacting business so . . .

So what? So there cannot be perfect safety? True, but with due respect, Mr. Secretary, quit changing the subject, which is trucks. The subject is not whether embassies should be open, but whether they should be approachable by trucks loaded with enough explosives to level the buildings. There are more interesting subjects, but this one keeps coming up, so let's stick with it.

You, too, Secretary of Defense, no more of this: "People can acquire and have acquired helicopters and you can get a couple of people that can learn to fly one just far enough to get there and kill themselves, then all your barriers and tank traps are not going to prevent that."

What does Caspar Weinberger want to be, the Mary Lou Retton of irrelevancy—the Olympic record setter? He is changing the subject, which is not helicopters, but trucks.

It is, of course, un-American to cross on foot any distance that a vehicle can carry you across, but it is not unreasonable to say that moving vehicles shall not approach within 200 yards of certain U.S. facilities. War is hell, and Beirut is a war zone, so some people are going to have to walk. And even if that is unthinkable, it is not beyond the wit of the Pentagon, which we entrust with interesting sums of money, to swiftly devise and erect barriers that at least would have forced the last truck, which evidently carried 3,000 pounds of explosives, to move so slowly that gunfire would have stopped it sooner.

Weinberger's thoughts on helicopters are intensely uninteresting, other than as an example of how misplaced loyalties can cause an intelligent man to be at once vigorous and vapid. Weinberger is protecting subordinates, colleagues and himself, whereas what needs looking after is the national interest. That certainly is not served by statements about the foreordained futility of any attempts to defeat persons bent on suicide. The Secret Service does not accept that premise when planning protection of the president.

Speaking of the president, consider his contribution to the discussion of why proper security provisions (we are not talking about high technology, we are talking about steel and concrete) were not completed. "Anyone that's ever had their kitchen done over knows that it never gets done as soon as you wish it would."

"Wish"? My admittedly imperfect understanding of our system is that if you carry 44 states you get to be president for four years, there will be things you can only wish for, but some things you can demand, and you can raise hell and spread misery among subordinates who do not deliver.

The president's laconic, complacent comparison to home improvements misses a few points, two of which are: the commander in chief has more leverage over his forces than the rest of us have over carpenters. And if carpenters are dilatory, the kitchen is inconvenient; if the commander in chief's employees are dilatory, people die.

What Walter Mondale is working himself up to say, in his murky way, is that the president does not have the energy level or interest to monitor even the important details of government. That is not true, and saying it will not appreciably help Mondale, but the following is true:

The administration's sloth (Jerry Falwell, call the Oval Office and report that sloth is one of the deadly sins) regarding security in Beirut is evidence of the president's failure to perform his first duty. That duty is to instill a healthy level of fear—fear of him—among his subordinates.

Herbert Hoover reportedly once mused that a president ought to be allowed to hang two persons a year without giving any reason or explanation. When Hoover was asked if two would suffice, he said perhaps not, but a president could spread the word to 20 or 30 others that they are being considered for the honor. Reagan needs such an honors list. He has an enchanting smile, but also needs an energizing scowl.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Vermont, and I thank the Presiding Officer.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Like so many of us here, I find myself constantly indebted to him not only for his knowledge, past experiences in the military, as a Governor, and as a Senator, but the sense of history that he brings to bear on these matters.

I also wish to compliment and praise the distinguished senior Senator from New York for his comments and for the way he put this issue into perspective.

Mr. President, we have, I suspect—as probably happened with other Presidents during an election—the problem that the occupants of the White House, maybe because of its geographical location, are susceptible to White House amnesia. This President has shown that he is incapable of ever fending it off.

But the comments made today go way beyond any case of White House amnesia. They are not only outrageous, beneath the dignity of the Office of the President of the United States, they are an irresponsible distortion, an irresponsible slur on the members of our intelligence service, a slur on the people who have died.

This is, after all, the President who likened the lack of security at the Beirut Embassy to someone fixing a kitchen.

I remind the President of the United States that he is not selling kitchen appliances for General Electric anymore. He is the Commander in Chief of this country, representing all of us, all Americans, with a responsibility to all Americans under his control and under his command abroad.

To try to laugh the bombing off as though these deaths were something akin to a kitchen remodeling job is no credit to him nor to the high and significant office he holds.

I remind those who are suffering from amnesia at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue that the U.S. Embassy in Beirut in April 1983 was subjected to a truck bomb and over 60 people died; subsequently the U.S. Marine headquarters in Beirut was subjected to a truck bomb in October and 241 died; the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait was subjected to a car bomb with 5 dead in December 1983, and now at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, there was a car bomb that left at least 9 dead, including 2 Americans, in September 1984.

These events did not happen during the term of Jimmy Carter, or Gerald Ford, or Richard Nixon, or Lyndon Johnson, or John Kennedy. They happened during the administration of Ronald Reagan.

The marines in Beirut, last October, were put in a building that could not be defended. There is no military person anywhere in the world who would claim that the building could have been defended.

They were sent in without being given a clear mission. The description of their mission changed from Presidential press conference to Presidential press conference. They faced an enemy that could not be identified or defined. They were not allowed to fight back. And then, under orders of the administration, on the directions of the Commander in Chief, the sentries were not even allowed to have bullets in their guns. The sentries who were out there to defend against the car bomb that killed over 240 of our bravest fighting men were not even allowed to have bullets in their guns.

Now can you imagine the outcry there would have been from candidate Reagan if President Carter had done that? There would have been calls for his impeachment.

But what do we hear instead? Somewhere we have a failure of the Carter administration. It was not the Carter administration, the Ford administration, or the Nixon administration that did not even allow the sentries to have bullets in their guns.

Now that is irresponsible. That is negligence.

Now what do we have? We have an embassy bombed one more time. And what do we find? Marines having been withdrawn as guards. We have contract guards out there. We have mechanical devices to stop them. So where are they? Piled up alongside the wall. They might as well be out in the lobby of the U.S. Senate for all the good they do there.

And what do we hear from the President after he finds that maybe people are not too excited by his analogy that the bombing is something like rebuilding a kitchen? He says, down in Bowling Green, that the failure is that of the intelligence service. And somehow, maybe because he is outside of Washington, he thinks that Jimmy Carter is running that intelligence service. He forgets that it is his.

Mr. President, I have served in the U.S. Senate for 10 years. Throughout that time I have been on committees that have handled the budget of the CIA, first as a member of the Armed Services Committee, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, and now as a member of the Intelligence Committee. I have watched the budget of the CIA, and the NSA, and the DIA, and all our other intelligence agencies. As the Presiding Officer and other Members of the Senate know, these budgets are classified, so I will not go into the specific amounts. But I will state this: That in the 10 years that I have been here, the first, biggest, and most significant jump in that intelligence service budget came under the Presidency of Jimmy Carter. The trend set by Jimmy Carter has been continued by Ronald Reagan.

And in the Appropriations Committee, the authorizing committee for the Intelligence Committee, there has been bipartisan support for the improvements throughout our intelligence service. There was bipartisan support given by our committee to Jimmy Carter. There has been bipartisan support given by our committee to Ronald Reagan. I find that virtually every cent of the budget for our intelligence agencies has been passed unanimously by our committee, by Republicans and Democrats, from across the political spectrum. And every time that budget comes up we hear from the Director of the CIA, who says how improved things are because we have done as they have asked since—as Senator MOYNIHAN's letter from the Director of the CIA points out—the administration of Jimmy Carter.

Deaths of brave Americans on duty in defense of their country, deaths caused by terrorists abroad should not be a partisan matter. They should not be trivialized. Their deaths should not be the fodder for quips and distortions.

Mr. President, I have spent 10 years in the U.S. Senate. I have given a number of speeches and I have been involved in a number of debates during that 10 years. I cannot think of a time during that 10 years when I have been as angry, Mr. President, as I am at this moment.

How dare the President of the United States make a statement like that? How dare he slur our intelligence services? And how dare he try to gloss over the deaths of brave Americans by trying to escape the responsibilities that are inherent here?

It was, after all, as the administration now admits, those same intelligence agencies that warned of these car bombs. It was, after all, those same organizations that all of us in this body have voted to fund, it was those same organizations that pointed out the lack of security at our Embassy in Beirut and urged that that security problem be taken care of.

Now certainly it is justifiable for the President of the United States, in a reelection campaign, to say what things he has done to improve over past Presidents. And certainly it is justifiable for the President of the United States to point to his record in contrast to any other President's record. That is not only justifiable, but I think should be done in a political arena.

But it is not justifiable to distort the truth of what happened. Because nobody knows the truth better than the President of the United States. Nobody knows better than the President of the United States the improvements in the intelligence arena that have been made both by his predecessor and by himself. And nobody knows better than the President of the United States where the negligence occurred in this matter.

This is no different than the situation we had when the marines were massacred. Who is to blame? Sentries without bullets in their guns facing enemies that cannot be defined, unable to fight back, put in what has to be an almost classical target for a car bomb in a country in which this kind of terrorist attack is endemic.

Mr. President, all Members of this body should say to the President of the United States, if he does not immediately retract what he said and make his grievous mistake clear to the people of the United States, "For shame, Mr. President. For shame. You shame your office. You shame the political process, and you shame the memories of brave Americans who have died abroad."

There has been in no area that I know of in the 10 years that I have been here with more bipartisan support for President Reagan and President Carter than in improving and enhancing our intelligence services. And to now toss that aside helps neither him, his campaign, nor our country. And certainly it is not the kind of precedent any President should leave behind.

Mr. President, I have talked longer on the subject than I had intended. I must admit that I have felt emotion that I have not felt before in my 10 years on the floor of the Senate. But this is something that is not a matter that should be the subject of a 30-second quip or for a cut for the evening TV news.

This affects the worldwide responsibilities of the United States. It affects very much the responsibility of our Government to the people who serve all of us. It affects the question of peace within the Middle East.

In the nuclear age, we cannot afford to make such quips that only distort our intelligence capability, and will lead our adversaries and potential adversaries around the world to misunderstand our intelligence capabilities.

So I hope that the President will realize his grievous mistake, and that he will retract his irresponsible remark.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5973) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the fiscal year 1985 Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriations bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee proposes new budget authority totaling $8,141,830,000. When the House's $5 billion Synfuels Corporation rescission is discounted, this is an increase of some $107.9 million above the House-passed program level, and an increase of nearly $515 million above the adjusted budget request of $7.627 billion.

As in the past, Mr. President, this bill impacts every State in the Union, whether through acquisition of lands for public purposes; continuation of energy, geologic, hydrologic, or wildlife-related research; operation of various programs created for American Indians; or maintaining Federal support for arts, humanities, and museums. Virtually every Member of Congress has a stake in the passage of this bill, and I am hopeful we can complete the bill quickly on the floor, conference with the House, and bring back a conference report before the beginning of fiscal year 1985 which both the Congress and the President can support.

This latter point is extremely important to note, because the bill at $8.142 billion is nearly $515 million over the President's adjusted request and $317 million over the Rose Garden agreement, and is frankly already more than I believe the President will accept. I must warn you now that we will be hard pressed to add much more to this bill on the Senate floor and, perhaps more important, the House and Senate conferees will have to trim at least $317 million off the bill before we bring it back for passage and send it to the President.

Another important issue which bears mentioning is that the Interior bill as passed by the House contains provisions which again unnecessarily prohibit the leasing of Outer Continental Shelf lands through fiscal year 1985. Should these provisions be included in the bill the conferees send to the President, we very possibly will see it returned with a veto. The President has over the past 2 years gritted his teeth and signed each of the Interior appropriation bills that have contained 1 year OCS prohibitions. I do not believe he will be so kind to us in the future.

As I indicated a moment ago, this bill does indeed have something for everyone, and I would like to take just a moment to outline what the committee has recommended for some of the more popular programs:

For Land and Water Conservation Fund, the committee has recommended $240,013,000, an increase of $65,378,000 over the budget request. This includes $75 million for State grants under LWCF.

For Fish and Wildlife Service, the committee has recommended an increase of $49,143,000 over the budget, including full funding for the cooperative unit program and for FWS law enforcement and protection, an additional $1,988,000 for hatcheries operations and maintenance, and an additional $6,831,000 for wildlife refuge operations and maintenance.

For historic preservation, the committee has recommended a funding level of $26,000,000 while the administration has requested no funds.

For the U.S. Geological Survey, Bureau of Mines, and Surface Mining, the committee has recommended additional funds totaling over $55 million, including increased funds for volcano hazard reduction research, energy geologic and water resource studies, mapping, State reclamation grants, and full funding for the Mineral Institute and State Water Research Institute Programs.

For Fossil Energy Research and Development, the committee has recommended $275,633,000, an increase of $75,752,000 over the budget request. This level includes $35,900,000 for continued work on fuel cells and $29,800,000 for ongoing magnetohydrodynamics research.

For Energy Conservation, the committee has recommended $449,844,000. This represents an increase of $59,767,000 over the budget request and includes additional funding for building systems; waste energy reduction; industrial conservation; vehicle propulsion research and development; electric and hybrid vehicle research; EPCA, EES, schools and hospitals and weatherization research, and the energy related inventors program.

For Indian Health, the committee has proposel $839,778,000, an increase of $97,828,000 over the budget request of $741,950,000.

For the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities, a total funding level of $301,975,000 has been recommended by the committee. This level is essentially the same as that provided in fiscal year 1984 and represents an increase of $32,625,000 above the budget request.

At this point Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table comparing the committee reported bill with the President's budget request and the House-passed bill for fiscal year 1985, and with the appropriated levels for fiscal years 1980 through 1984.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the President's statement of administration policy and the Office of Management and Budget's analysis of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I emphasize once again the extreme importance of approving this bill without increasing the funding levels to the point where we have no hope of getting a signed bill. I emphasize once again the extreme importance of approving this bill without adding restrictions on Outer Continental Shelf leasing, which would also make it difficult, if not impossible, to get a bill. Please don't lose sight of the fact that the lack of an Interior Appropriations bill will impact each and every one of us.

Mr. President, I would be happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, the floor manager for the minority, to make whatever statement he may wish to make at this time.

H.R. 5973, INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS BILL, 1985 (McCLURE, (R) IDAHO)

The Administration is seriously concerned by the aggregate spending levels for discretionary programs provided in the FY 1985 Interior Appropriations Bill. In its present form, the bill exceeds the deficit down payment cap by $317 million and would therefore be unacceptable. However, the Administration believes that the Senate bill could serve as the basis for an acceptable conference agreement that would meet the deficit reduction goals established by the down payment cap.

The overall increase in spending provided in the bill is in part masked by the rescission of $226 million in timber purchaser road construction credits. This rescission is at best a technical bookkeeping correction that will have no effect on spending or program operating levels and should accordingly not be considered when determining whether the bill in the aggregate meets the cap.

In addition to its concern with the overall totals for spending under the bill, the Administration has several objections to specific program funding levels and language provisions:

Increases of $180 million in Interior and the Forest Service for recreational land acquisition and development by both the Federal Government and by the Senate.

Add-ons of $336 million over and above the increases for land purchases. These increases are primarily for low priority construction activities and unnecessary increases in operating programs for the Department of Interior discretionary programs.

Increases of $106 million for the Forest Service over and above the increases for land purchases for such non-essential activities as pest control, firefighting on non-Federal lands and low priority local research projects.

Appropriations for Indian health services that exceed the President's request by $54 million and unrequested funding for Indian health facilities construction of $44 million.

Additional funding of $76 million for Fossil energy and $28 million for Energy conservation research and development programs.

Funding a new Institute of Museum Services grant program for cultural organizations in the Washington, D.C., area. Such a program would be inconsistent with this agency's mission to provide grants exclusively to museums.

Bill language that infringes upon the Executive Branch's ability to manage activities included in this bill, such as;

A requirement that the Department of Energy solicit clean coal technology demonstration proposals.

A prohibition against the use of personnel ceilings, making allocations and management of limited personnel resources very difficult.

Failure to provide transfer authority as requested for the Department of Energy.

Maintenance of personnel floors for Fossil energy, Energy conservation and Indian health programs.

Although the off-budget spending of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is not covered by the deficit down payment cap, the Committee provided an additional $462 million to increase the fill rate from 145,000 B/D to 186,000 B/D.

As noted above, the Administration believes that the Senate bill could provide the basis for a conference agreement that is acceptable. We urge the Senate to reject all amendments that would further increase spending in order to permit the conference committee to produce a bill that is under the deficit down payment cap and to seek to have the objectionable language provisions deleted.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 7, 1984.

Hon. JAMES A. MCCLURE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As the Senate prepares to consider H.R. 5973, the 1985 Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations bill, I would like to convey the Administration's position on the bill as recommended by the Senate Committee. In its present form, the discretionary portion of this bill exceeds the deficit down payment cap by $317 million, and therefore is unacceptable. However, the Administration believes that the Senate bill could serve as the basis for an acceptable conference agreement that would meet established deficit reduction goals.

The overall increase in spending provided in the bill is in part masked by the rescission of $226 million in timber purchaser road construction credits. This rescission is at best a technical bookkeeping correction that will have no effect on spending or program operating levels and should accordingly not be considered when determining whether the bill in the aggregate meets the cap.

Other objections to the bill include:

Increases of $180 million in Interior and Forest Service for recreational land acquisition and development by both the Federal Government and by the States.

Additions of $336 million for the Department of the Interior discretionary programs over and above the increases for land purchases. Of this amount, $68 million is for low priority construction activity in several Bureaus and the remainder is for unnecessary increases in operating programs.

Increases of $106 million in Forest Service appropriations over and above the increases for land purchases for such nonessential activities as support for pest management and firefighting on non-Federal lands, unnecessary increases for reforestation and timber stand improvement, and funding of relatively low priority local research projects.

Appropriations for the Indian Health Service which exceed the President's request by $98 million, of which $44 million represents unnecessary funding for Indian health facilities construction. In addition, the bill funds two programs proposed for elimination—Community Health Representatives, which is only remotely related to the provision of primary care services; and Urban Health, which duplicates existing Federal, State, and local health programs.

Additional funding of $76 million for Fossil energy and $28 million for Energy conservation research and development programs. This unnecessary funding is largely for continuation of near-term projects that have already achieved proof-of-concept and should become the responsibility of the private sector.

Funding a new Institute of Museum Services (IMS) grant program to serve cultural organizations in the Washington, D.C., area. Any such program is highly inappropriate since Washington-based organizations are already eligible to compete for grants from IMS and the National Endowments for the Arts and the Humanities. Not only is this an issue of special treatment, but such a program would be highly inconsistent with this small agency's mission to provide grants exclusively to museums.

Funding for the Energy Extension Service and the Grants to State Energy Offices that are proposed for termination. In addition, the Administration's request for funding for the Low-Income Weatherization and Schools and Hospitals Conservation Program was contingent upon enactment of proposed legislation to finance these programs with petroleum overcharge funds, which the Congress has failed to enact.

While the items outlined above remain impediments to the successful enactment of this bill, the Administration is pleased by the Subcommittee's actions to strike many of the restrictive language provisions in the House version of H.R. 5973. These laudable changes include removal of:

Leasing restrictions on the Outer Continental Shelf.

An A-76 implementation restriction.

A provision transferring all Indian-related activities from the Secretary's Office of the Solicitor to the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

A prohibition that restricts the Secretary of the Interior's discretion to offer on-shore oil and gas leases.

Detailed itemization of appropriations in the Office of the Secretary of the Interior.

A 14 day nonreimbursable detail limitation in Interior.

However, there remain several objectionable provisions that have the combined affect of constraining the discretion of various executive branch agencies in carrying out their responsibilities. They are:

A requirement that the Department of Energy solicit private sector proposals for new Federally-funded clean coal technology demonstration projects. The Administration believes that the private sector should undertake such projects with private financing. This provision is unacceptable because it could lead to the establishment of a new Federal demonstration program costing as much as $1 billion or more. Previous experience has shown that Federally financed technology demonstration programs have been fraught with technical and political problems and have been generally unsuccessful. It was this recognition that led Congress to cancel the previous DOE demonstration program in 1981.

A prohibition against the use of personnel ceilings, making allocation and management of limited personnel resources very difficult. No manager of a complex institution can be expected to operate effectively under this handicap.

Failure to provide transfer authority as requested for the Department of Energy.

Continuation of personnel floors for Fossil energy, Energy conservation and Indian health programs.

Although the off-budget spending of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is not covered by the deficit down payment cap, the Committee provides an additional $462 million (24 percent) above the Administration request for crude oil acquisitions. The end of year 1985 fill level would increase from 482 to 499 million barrels, an increase of only 3 percent. This increase in the fill rate from 145,000 B/D to 186,000 B/D adds nearly half a billion dollars to Federal borrowing requirements, but would only marginally increase our level of energy emergency preparedness.

As noted above, the Administration believes that the Senate bill could provide the basis for a conference agreement that is acceptable. Meeting fiscally responsible spending goals will permit the conference committee to produce a bill that is under the deficit down payment cap. I urge you to use your influence and leadership in the Senate to reject all amendments that would further increase spending and to seek to have the objectionable language provisions deleted.

Sincerely,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased that we now have an opportunity to consider fiscal year 1985 funding for the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies. The bill, as reported by the Appropriations Committee, totals $8,141,830,000, which is $259 million below the subcommittee allocation under section 302(b) of the Budget Act.

Most notably, perhaps, this bill would return approximately $4.5 billion to the Treasury from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation funds. This rescission and the ancillary agreements have been worked out after many months of tedious negotiations with the White House. It is my understanding that the administration supports this compromise in its entirety. I think the agreement is very fair and will now permit the nomination of five new members for the Board of the Corporation and the resumption, albiet on a limited basis, of this Nation's Synthetic Fuels Development Program.

This Interior bill continues to have the same broad interest of past bills recommended by the subcommittee. There is something for just about everybody. Land acquisition for the national parks, forests, and wildlife refuges totals $165 million; and there is an additional $75 million for State assistance which is appropriated from the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

In the area of energy, the bill contains funding adequate to support a fill rate of 186,000 barrels per day for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. This rate would accomplish a total reserve of approximately half a billion barrels by the end of 1985, roughly equivalent to 4 months of reserves at our present rate of imports. Also, the low-income energy assistance program is funded at $190 million and the schools and hospitals program at $48 million, both of which are the same as the fiscal year 1984 levels.

And, to wrap up this brief summary, Mr. President, the Senate Interior bill strikes the moratoria on off-shore leasing which was included in the House-passed bill. We have discussed these moratoria at great length in this Chamber in the past, but really it makes no sense to impose any moratoria this year when none of the areas at issue last year have prospective lease sales in fiscal year 1985.

In closing, I commend Chairman McCLURE for his thorough knowledge of the subject matter in this Interior bill, for his diligence in conducting 19 days of hearings related to this year's bill, and for the fairness which he has shown in his recommendations to the committee.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments, with the exception of that striking the language on page 62, lines 14 to 22, and with the exception of section 308, be agreed to en bloc and that the bill as thus amended be regarded as original text for the purpose of further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I shall not be able to agree until such time as I check with a Member or two on this request. I hope we shall be able to agree shortly.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I have propounded a unanimous-consent request, and a reservation was pending as to an objection. Let me rephrase that request, because I understand that there are two other requests for exceptions to the committee amendments.

I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments with the exception of that striking the language on page 62, lines 14 and 22, with the exception of section 308, and section 315, and on page 26, line 18, through line 5 on page 27, and the language appearing on page 29, line 4, be agreed to en bloc and that the bill as thus amended be regarded for the purpose of amendment as original text.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the distinguished manager of the bill include verbiage to the effect that no points of order are hereby waived?

Mr. President, I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY and Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished manager of the bill if he included in the unanimous-consent request the section on page 62, lines 14 to 22.

Mr. McCLURE. That would be excepted from the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, do I correctly understand from what the chairman has said that section 318, which is a committee amendment, is exempted from this request also?

Mr. McCLURE. Section 315 is exempted from the request. I understood that to be the request of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. I informed the chairman that I am not in 315. Section 318, which is legislation on an appropriation bill, dealing with geothermal resources——

Mr. McCLURE. Does the Senator want that added to the exception?

Mr. MELCHER. I believe so. I should like to amend that section and to be in the position that no points of order will lie against it. By exempting it, I will be in that position.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator will be in that situation if it is adopted as original text under the unanimous consent request. If it is exempted, he would be in a worse position, I say to the Senator.

Mr. MELCHER. I inquire of the Chair: Since section 318 is legislation on an appropriation bill, if I amend that section with further legislation on an appropriation bill, will a point of order lie against it on that basis?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLURE. Section 318, as the Senator indicates, is legislation on an appropriation bill. An amendment to it that is no more legislation than the amendment that is already there would not then be subject to the point of order, if no point of order would lie against the original text. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, that is not correct. The unanimous-consent request is going to protect section 318 as written, but not amendments thereto.

Mr. McCLURE. If the Senator from Montana wished to amend that section of the bill, he would be in precisely the same position, regardless of whether the unanimous consent is granted or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I just do not want section 318 as it is written to be ahead of me. For that reason, I request that section 318 be——

Mr. McCLURE. I will add section 318 to the exception, and I so modify my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The committee amendments agreed to are as follows:

(The parts intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets and the parts intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to conduct inventories or segments of inventories, such as data analysis activities, by contract with private entities deemed by him to be qualified to engage in such activities whenever he has determined that such contracts would decrease Federal expenditures and would produce comparable or superior results: Provided further, That in carrying out any such inventory or surveys, where National Forest System lands are involved, the Secretary of the Interior shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture concerning any activities affecting surface resources: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of the Interior to issue oil and gas leases for the subsurface of any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas, that are immediately adjacent to producing oil and gas fields or areas that are prospectively valuable. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Energy, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, are authorized to enter into contracts with State and local governmental entities, including local fire districts, for procurement of services in the presuppression, detection, and suppression of fires on any units within their jurisdiction. In addition, any contracts or agreements with the jurisdiction for fire management services listed above which are previously executed shall remain valid.

[SEC. 314. None of the funds provided by this Act to the Fish and Wildlife Service may be obligated or expended to plan for, conduct, or supervise deer hunting on the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

AMENDMENT NO. 4847

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I send an additional committee amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be agreed to, and that the bill as thus amended be regarded for the purpose of amendment as original text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the chairman specify what the amendment is?

Mr. McCLURE. This amendment deals with mineral leasing on a tract of land in Payne County, OK, totaling 960 acres. It was adopted in the continuing resolution yesterday, in committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE] proposes an amendment numbered 4847.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in Title III add the following new section:

"None of the funds provided for in this Continuing Resolution or hereafter provided shall be used to lease the mineral interest of the United States with respect to a tract of land in Payne County, Oklahoma, totalling 960 acres located on the Indian Base Meridian; Township 19 North; Range 1 East, Section 22 W ½; Section 26 NW ¼; Section 27 N ½, SE ¼; unless such lease prohibits the surface occupancy of the land for development of those interests."

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment (No. 4847) was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations I modify the committee amendment numbered section 308 beginning on page 88, line 15, and send the modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The modified amendment is as follows:

On page 88, line 15, strike out of all section 308 and insert new section 308 as follows:

SEC. 308. Except for lands described by sections 105 and 106 of Public Law 96-560, section 103 of Public Law 96-550, section 5(d)(1) of Public Law 96-312, and except for land in the State of Alaska, and lands in the national forest system released to management for any use the Secretary of Agriculture deems appropriate through the land management planning process by any statement or other Act of Congress designating components of the National Wilderness Preservation System now in effect or hereinafter enacted, and except to carry out the obligations and responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior under section 17(k)(1)(A) and (B) of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226), none of the funds provided in this Act shall be obligated for any aspect of the processing or issuance of permits or leases pertaining to exploration for or development of coal, oil, gas, oil shale, phosphate, potassium, sulphur, gilsonite, or geothermal resources on Federal lands within any component of the National Wilderness Preservation System or within any Forest Service RARE II areas recommended for wilderness designation or allocated to further planning in Executive Communication 1504, Ninety-sixth Congress (House Document numbered 96-119); or within any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas or within Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas: Provided, That nothing in this section shall prohibit the expenditure of funds for any aspect of the processing or issuance of permits pertaining to exploration for or development of the mineral resources described in this section, within any component of the National Wilderness Preservation System now in effect or hereinafter enacted, any Forest Service RARE II areas recommended for wilderness designation or allocated to further planning, within any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas, or Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas, under valid existing rights, or leases validly issued in accordance with all applicable Federal, State, and local laws or valid mineral rights in existence prior to October 1, 1982: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in any area of National Forest lands or the Secretary of the Interior to issue under their existing authority in any area of National Forest or public lands withdrawn pursuant to this Act such permits as may be necessary to conduct prospecting, seismic surveys, and core sampling conducted by helicopter or other means not requiring construction of roads or improvement of existing roads or ways, for the purpose of gathering information about and inventorying energy, mineral, and other resource values of such area, if such activity is carried out in a manner compatible with the preservation of the wilderness environment: Provided further, That seismic activities involving the use of explosives shall not be permitted in designated wilderness areas: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of the Interior to augment recurring surveys of the mineral values of wilderness areas pursuant to section 4(d)(2) of the Wilderness Act and acquire information on other national forest and public land areas withdrawn pursuant to this Act, by conducting, in conjunction with the Secretary of Energy, the national laboratories, or other Federal agencies, as appropriate, such mineral inventories of areas withdrawn pursuant to this Act as he deems appropriate. MODIFICATION OF EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS BEGINNING ON PAGE 62

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, I modify the committee amendment on page 62, lines 14 to 22, and I send the modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The modified amendment is as follows:

On page 62, lines 14 to 22, strike the text and insert in lieu thereof the following:

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

ENERGY SECURITY RESERVE

(Rescission)

Of the funds appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve by the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1980 (Public Law 96-126) and subsequently made available to carry out Title

I, part B of the Energy Security Act (Public Law 96-294) by Public Laws 96-304 and 96-514, $5,200,000,000 are rescinded:

Provided, That of the remaining funds in the Energy Security Reserve for carrying out Title I, Part B of the Energy Security Act, the amount of $5,700,000,000 shall be initially available only for obligation to projects with Letters of Intent authorized by the Board of Directors of the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation on or before June 1, 1984; and, if by reason of Board determinations that the Corporation will not enter into financial assistance contracts with projects for which such Letters were authorized, or that lesser amounts of financial assistance than those specified in such authorizations shall be awarded, there remains a balance of such amount which is unobligated and uncommitted, 50 percent of said balance shall cease to be available for obligation and the remaining 50 percent of said balance shall thereafter be available for commitment or obligation by the Corporation pursuant to the Energy Security Act:

Provided further, That until such time as the comprehensive strategy is approved pursuant to section 126(c) of the Energy Security Act, the Board of Directors shall solicit proposals and award financial assistance pursuant to applicable sections of the Energy Security Act without regard to the national synthetic fuel production goal established under section 125 of the Act:

Provided further, That of the $5,200,000,000 rescinded from the Energy Security Reserve, $750,000,000 shall be deposited and retained in a separate account hereby established in the Treasury of the United States, entitled the "Clean Coal Technology Reserve," which account and the appropriations therefor, shall be available for the purpose of conducting clean coal technology demonstration activities, including those identified in Sec. 320 of the Fiscal Year 1985 Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations (H.R. 5973, Senate Report 98-578), without fiscal year limitation, subject to subsequent annual appropriation in the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, as I understand our parliamentary situation at this time, the bill as modified is before us with the committee amendments adopted as part of the bill to be treated as original text with the exception of those noted in the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. The pending business would be on the committee amendments thus not yet agreed to. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the first committee amendment not agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Senator BRADLEY has an amendment to the section with respect to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and in order to reach that first matter of business, it would require unanimous consent to set aside the other pending committee amendments; Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we set aside the pending committee amendments so that we may move to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation section of the bill in order that the Senator from New Jersey may offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, pending the offering of the amendment to this section by the Senator from New Jersey, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] to the same section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4848

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE] for Senator METZENBAUM proposes an amendment numbered 4848.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment to P. 62, line 22 add the following new section at the end:

SEC. . (a) Section 117 of the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Subject to section 118, Directors, officers, and employees of the Corporation shall be subject to the same standards of ethical conduct and financial reporting as are set forth in Executive Order 11222. The Chairman shall promptly implement such standards.".

(b) Section 168 of the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation Act of 1980 is amended by—

(1) Redesignating section 168 as subsection 168 (a); and

(2) Inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) An aggrieved person may bring action in the district courts of the United States to enforce, and secure compliance with, the policies and guidelines of the Corporation implementing the requirements of subsection 116(f) for public disclosure of information and the requirements of subsections 121(a) and (b) for meetings of the Board of Directors to be open to the public and preceded by reasonable public notice.".

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I support a strong, well-funded SFC—but a strong, well-funded SFC is still impotent unless the integrity of its decisions are unassailable.

The fact is that the history of the SFC is of an agency crippled by conflicts of interest and mismanagement.

Two presidents resigned amid charges of conflict of interest and mismanagement; five Board members have resigned; seven top corporation officers have resigned; awards were made to projects after a Board member with a conflict delayed his resignation to approve them.

When Congress created the SFC in 1980, it went overboard to insulate the agency from public scrutiny. The scandals and outrages that have subsequently bedeviled the SFC are the direct result of this lack of oversight and accountability.

If we are to avoid the shenanigans of the last 3 years, if we are to finally develop sound synfuels projects, we must make the SFC more accountable to the American people.

Currently, the SFC must issue guidelines regarding disclosure and open meetings. But it is the judge and jury when it comes to determining whether it has lived up to the guidelines. The usual appeals available to persons or groups victimized by arbitrary and capricious Government action are unilaterally denied to those dealing with the SFC.

This amendment gives aggrieved persons a right to sue the SFC in U.S. district court to seek enforcement of and compliance with its freedom of information and Government-in-the-sunshine guidelines. In making decisions on actions brought under this provision, courts should be governed by the Energy Security Act conference report language on sections 116(f) and 121 regarding the application of the body of law developed in litigation construing the exemptions in subsection (c) of section 552b of title 5 and the exemptions in 5 U.S.C. 552(b).

The second part of the amendment would subject SFC directors—both full time and part time—and other SFC employees to the same conflict of interest rules governing other Federal employees. Nothing has been more damaging to the agency's credibility than the evidence and suggestion of impropriety on the part of directors. This amendment will help restore the SFC's tarnished image and guard against future scandals.

A synfuels program crippled by conflicts of interest and mismanagement is no synfuels program. My goal is not to weaken the SFC, but to strengthen it. These amendments will move us toward a synfuels program whose hallmark is openness and integrity. That is the only kind of program that will make a contribution to our energy future.●

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, this amendment applies to certain provisions of other statutes to the operations of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. It has been carefully checked by the majority staff, and I believe the minority staff as well.

We have no objection to the amendment and urge its adoption.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the minority, in the spirit of compromise, will also accept this amendment, not because we think it is absolutely necessary but because it makes a good compromise and makes a viable piece of legislation and we therefore accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment (No. 4848) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4849

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] for himself and Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. HUMPHREY, and Mr. NICKLES proposes an amendment numbered 4849.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Of the funds appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve by the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1980 (Public Law 96-126) and subsequently made available to carry out Title I, part B of the energy Security Act (Public Law 96-294) by Public Laws 96-304 and 96-514, $9,000,000,000 are rescinded;

Provided, that none of the funds made available to carry out Title I, part B of the Energy Security Act shall be obligated to projects whose products will cost significantly more than projected market prices of competing fuels over the lifetime of the project;

Provided further, that of the Energy Security Reserve funds remaining available to carry out Title I of the Energy Security Act, funds shall be obligated only to projects whose primary conversion technologies comply with and promote the diversity objectives set forth in Title I of the energy Security Act;

Provided further, that Sections 116(f) and 121 of Title I, part B of the Energy Security Act are repealed and that Section 175 of the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation Act of 1980 (42 USC 8775) is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(l) Chapters 5 and 7 of title 5, United States Code (containing provisions popularly known as the Administrative Procedure Act, the Freedom of Information Act, and the Government in the Sunshine Act) shall apply to the Corporation as if it were an agency of the United States.

"(m) Section 1905 of title 18, United States Code (relating to disclosure of confidential information), shall apply—

"(1) To Directors, officers, and employees of the Corporation as if they were officers or employees of the United States; and

"(2) to the Corporation as if it were an agency of the United States."

Section 118(a) of the Energy Security Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-294) is amended by striking out "the Directors and officers of the Corporation and to" and inserting in lieu thereof "all the Directors and to the officers and".

Section 118(c)(3) of the Energy Security Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-294) is repealed.

Provided further, that Section 117(b)(2) of the Energy Security Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-294) is amended—

(1) by striking out "taking into consideration" and inserting in lieu thereof "in accordance with"; and

(2) by striking out ". If the Board of Directors:" and all that follows through "Board of Directors to such effect".

The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section shall take effect 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, this amendment would rescind $9 billion from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and would provide necessary reforms in project selection and public accountability.

I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee what is his intention with regard to the amendment given the time frame within which we are working.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I know that earlier the Senator from New Jersey had indicated that we could get, with a very brief debate, to a rollcall vote on it.

My understanding is that the majority leader has indicated that we will commence no rollcall votes past the hour of 6 p.m. this evening.

I do not know if the Senator from New Jersey feels that this is unduly restrictive on his debate time and if so, I am certain we have no intention to shortchange the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I do understand there will be no vote after 6 p.m. tonight and there will be no vote before 6 p.m. tomorrow night.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BRADLEY. I will make a decision.

The current Synfuels Program places a priority on rapid, large-scale commercialization even though the technologies are plagued with environmental, technical, and economic problems. In addition, the track record of the synfuels industry confirms that maintaining this approach will only generate enormous Federal deficits and yield little, if any, energy security.

Sound energy and fiscal policy dictate that we reevaluate the SFC and fashion a more manageable and effective synfuels effort.

Only a comprehensive reform package achieves this goal. Our amendment leaves the SFC with $4.3 billion to fund additional, qualified projects. Establishing a lower, more reasonable level of funding will encourage the agency to be more discriminating in its awards, and reduce the emphasis on enormously expensive, large-scale projects. The case for a lower funding level is presented in more detail in the attachment to this letter.

In addition, our amendment contains the following elements:

DIVERSITY STANDARD

This provision directs that the SFC award all future assistance to projects which further the technological diversity goals of the Energy Security Act. Redundant projects add little to our energy security goal.

ACCOUNTABILITY PROVISIONS

The SFC currently enjoys a multiyear authorization and appropriation with little program oversight and review. Therefore, it is important that the usual laws governing agency procedure and protecting congressional oversight be applied to the SFC. Our accountability provisions would apply the Freedom of Information Act, the Administrative Procedures Act, financial disclosure, conflict of interest laws and Federal pay scale standards to the SFC and its employees.

By reducing SFC funding to a more reasonable level and emphasizing the moderately scaled development of diverse technologies, this reform package establishes a more responsible and effective Synfuels Program.

REASONS FOR SUPPORTING A $9 BILLION RECISSION

First, our amendment recognizes that world oil prices render impossible any reasonable Federal effort to rapidly commercialize the synthetic fuels industry. The proponents of the Energy Security Act of 1980 argued that its budgetary impact would be minimal because aid was in the form of loan and price guarantees and real world oil prices would continue to increase. But the world price of oil has fallen to $29 per barrel whereas the price of synfuels has increased to as much as $60 to $90 per barrel. It is now clear that near-term commercialization of synthetic fuels is impossible without very large budgetary impacts. SFC Chairman Ed Noble has admitted that the SFC would have to make good on most of the contingent liabilities it plans to commit. That is certain to occur unless the world price of oil doubles or triples within the next few years.

Second, our amendment recognizes the transformation of the Synthetic Fuels Program from a strategy of rapid commercialization into a program to demonstrate diverse synthetic fuels technologies on a smaller scale. The SFC no longer plans to meet the original goals of 500,000 barrels daily by 1987 and 2,000,000 barrels daily by 1992. Most of the projects which the SFC is currently considering have an initial production capability of 2,000 to 10,000 barrels per day. Larger scale projects are very expensive—Great Plains, $2.02 billion plus proposed additional assistance of $790 million; Union II, $2.7 billion; Cathedral Bluffs, $2.2 billion. The SFC's basic business plan estimates a total production capability in all of the facilities that the SFC might underwrite of only 136,000 barrels per day. Former SFC Vice President Bowden estimated that $150 billion in Federal expenditures would be necessary to meet the original goal of 2 million barrels daily. It is now time to recognize that the original strategy of near term commercialization will not work and that we should make adjustments in funding levels which are appropriate to a technology demonstration program.

Third, the McClure-Byrd-Reagan compromise is unrealistic in light of the shift away from rapid commercialization of synthetic fuels. The proposed compromise rescinds $5.2 billion, leaving $5.7 billion in an "Energy Security Reserve" for obligation to the projects with letters of intent or proposed letters of intent. If the Board decides not to commit all of the $5.7 billion in the reserve, half of these funds would revert to the Treasury while the other half would be available for obligation to new projects. This compromise would allow the SFC to support all of the projects with letters of intent—including the Union II project $2.7 billion and perhaps the Cathedral Bluffs project $2.2 billion—while still leaving either $1.3 or $2.4 billion—available for new projects—depending on whether Cathedral Bluffs is supported.

But there is a strong case against assistance to the Union II and the Cathedral Bluffs projects once the goal of rapid commercialization is abandoned. Both projects are very expensive, totaling $4.9 billion of the present $6.8 billion in projects with letters of intent or proposed letters of intent. And both projects rely heavily on the technology which is already employed in the SFC supported Union I project. While a program based on near-term commercialization might well support large scale projects with similar technology, there is a weak case for doing so in a program based on technology demonstration. Nor is there good reason to reserve SFC funds for the other six projects with letters of intent. It is well understood that a letter of intent does not represent any commitment on the part of either the SFC of the sponsors to sign a final contract. Either the SFC or the sponsors may change their minds about whether to proceed, as has indeed happened in three of the other five instances in which the SFC has issued a letter of intent.

Fourth, our amendment to rescind $9 billion will leave the SFC with ample moneys for a sound, diverse technology demonstration program. Our amendment would leave the SFC with $4.3 billion for further commitments. It is important to recall, however, that the Federal Government has already made commitments for $3.1 billion in support of synfuels development. If larger scale projects such as Union II or Cathedral Bluffs are not judged timely for SFC support, $4.3 billion is more than sufficient to support all or most of the remaining $1.9 billion in projects with letters of intent and leave at least $2.4 billion for new projects. Most new projects now being reviewed by the SFC are on a much smaller scale than had been originally envisaged by the Energy Security Act and do not require multibillion-dollar forms of assistance. We have an easy time understanding why our amendment might leave too much funding available to the SFC, but we have a hard time understanding how it leaves too little. We believe that once the goal of rapid commercialization is abandoned, the smaller scale technology demonstration program allowed by our amendment is the only realistic way for the Federal Government to further synthetic fuels development.

Congress must make sure that our Nation's Synfuels Program is adjusted to economic reality. We believe that ample funds would remain under our amendment for a strong synthetic fuels program which could include many of the pending projects plus new projects from different parts of the Nation employing diverse technologies. The problems at the SFC go beyond funding levels, but depriving the Corporation of the funds that might tempt it to adopt an unrealistic near term commercialization strategy is an essential first step toward the fundamental reforms which our present Federal Synfuels Program so urgently requires.

Mr. President, the $9 billion rescission is the rescission proposed by President Reagan exactly 4 months ago. Has he changed his mind? On what grounds? In addition to the administration's support 4 months ago, this amendment is supported by the following organizations: Sierra Club, Congress Watch, National Resources Defense Council, Wilderness Society, Environmental Action, Environmental Defense Fund, National Audubon Society, Environmental Policy Institute.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. President, in summary, our amendment recognizes that world oil prices render impossible any reasonable Federal effort to rapidly commercialize the synthetic fuel industry and recognize the transformation of the Synthetic Fuels Program from the strategy of rapid commercialization into a program to demonstrate diverse synthetic fuel technology on a minor scale, and I argue the compromise before the Senate at this time is unrealistic in light of the shift away from rapid commercialization of synthetic fuels.

Finally, the amendment to rescind $9 billion will leave the SSFC with ample money for a sound, diverse technology demonstration program.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues, Senators BRADLEY, NICKLES, PROXMIRE, and HUMPHREY, in support of this amendment to rescind $9 billion in Synthetic Fuels Corporation [SFC] funds and reform the Synfuels Program.

In addition to the cut in funds, this amendment provides necessary reforms in project selection and public accountability.

The current Synfuels Program places a priority on rapid, large-scale commercialization rather than needed research and development. The result is to waste billions of taxpayer dollars on technologies which are both economically and environmentally unsound.

The assumptions on which the Synfuels Program were based have proven to be at odds with the realities of today's marketplace. Congress now has both the opportunity and responsibility to reevaluate it. Sound energy and fiscal policy dictate that we fashion a more responsible, effective, and economical Synthetic Fuels Program.

This amendment would effect a comprehensive reform. It leaves the SFC with $4.3 billion to fund additional qualified projects; enough for a sound and diverse demonstration program. Such a funding level will encourage the agency to be more discriminating in its awards and reduce the emphasis on enormously expensive, large-scale projects.

Mr. President, the amendment being introduced today is a needed response to the shortcomings in the current Synthetic Fuels Program. I wholeheartedly urge its adoption.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in the interest of time, if the chairman would like to move to a vote on this amendment prior to 6 p.m., I am prepared to do that and ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. TRIBLE). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I see in the Chamber one of the cosponsors of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, and I wonder if he would mind if we move to a vote at this time.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I understand the time is right on 6 p.m. I have some comments and also I wish to discuss the McClure proposal. I do not see how we can get there at 6 p.m. I do not wish to hold anything up in any way whatsoever, but I still think we have basically two proposals and are talking about several billions of dollars, and again I am more than willing to vote on it as quickly as possible but we will probably decide we should discuss both proposals.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in that case, I think the magic hour has passed. What is the distinguished chairman's disposition?

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, my understanding of the usual arrangement and the one which the majority leader has already announced is that there would be no votes past the hour of 6 o'clock this evening. That hour having arrived, there would be no votes tonight on this measure or upon this amendment. However, it is possible for us to go ahead with a discussion of the amendment and it would be my expectation that we would do so.

If the Senator wishes to yield the floor at this moment on the amendment, I will give my remarks with respect to the amendment. We can then turn to the Senator from Oklahoma who has indicated he would like to discuss the proposal and ask some questions, which I am perfectly prepared to do.

When the Appropriations Committee adopted the Synfuels Corporation compromise as an amendment to the continuing resolution yesterday, it was cosponsored by myself, Senator JOHNSTON, Senator BYRD, Senator WARNER, Senator ARMSTRONG, Senator FORD, Senator ANDREWS, Senator GARN, and Senator BURDICK. Also supporting the amendment at that time were: Senator DOMENICI, Senator COHEN, Senator HUDDLESTON, Senator HATCH, Senator STEVENS, Senator METZENBAUM, Senator HEINZ, and Senator PERCY.

Mr. President, I rise today to speak on the future of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation Program. There is a continuing need for completion of the principal objective of statutory phase I, namely, the accelerated development of a selective number of commercial scale plants located in the United States.

Events in the Middle East continue to argue for increased efforts toward ensuring energy security for the United States. We have made commendable progress in the area of energy conservation. We have also made considerable progress in filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. But the specter of supply disruptions, accompanied by precipitous price increases, and foreign policy blackmail is always on the horizon.

The need still exists to ensure a long-term national capability for the domestic production of synthetic fuels. Such a capability for replication is needed as an insurance policy against an ever-widening gap between domestic consumption and production. And such a capability is needed if our abundant reserves of coal, oil shale, and tar sands are to fill this developing domestic supply gap in an environmentally compatible way.

But there is a complacency in the United States regarding the seriousness of our long-term energy vulnerability. The current ready availability of petroleum supplies at reduced prices is misleading. The suggested abundance of supplies has diverted our attention from the fact that over the longer term these supplies are politically and economically insecure. And the lack of secure energy supplies is, indeed, a grave national security problem.

Our complacency, while unwarranted, is understandable. As a Nation, today we are far better prepared to cope with disruptions in the world supply of petroleum than in the recent past. The Strategic Petroleum Reserve now has over 100 days of imports. We also are importing approximately 28 percent of our oil needs.

As consequence there is an ongoing annual trade deficit of $60 billion annually from crude oil alone. In addition, there is the cost to fill the Strategic Petroleum Reserve as well as $40 billion for a Rapid Development Force to ensure supplies from the Persian Gulf.

But this situation will change dramatically over the next decade, as it has over the last decade. By the turn of the century, we could be importing more than 50 percent of our petroleum unless we develop alternative sources of domestic supply. And synthetic fuels is one of those alternatives. If we are to reduce our strategic vulnerability we must develop such alternatives.

Recent events in the Persian Gulf only serve to dramatize the vulnerability of our present situation. They accentuate the importance of developing, in advance, a synthetic fuels option for the United States. The eyes of OPEC, the free world, and the Eastern Bloc all remain focused on the SFC and whether we are capable of keeping our nationa! commitment to the objectives of the Energy Security Act. If we falter in our commitment to establishment of a viable synthetic fuels capability in the United States, we would send the wrong signals to our allies and OPEC.

For several months the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has been handicapped by the lack of the legally required quorum for the conduct of business. Since the SFC was declared operational by President Reagan, a series of solicitations have been issued in order to achieve the objectives of statutory phase I. The proposals that have responded have effectively defined the universe of potential candidates.

The SFC has developed a basic business plan. The projects already included in the plan will have a production capability by 1989 of 135,800 barrels of oil equivalent a day. But, more importantly, these same projects will be expandable on the same sites to a production capability of almost 400,000 barrels of oil equivalent a day. Even without expansion, the total production from the 11 projects for which the SFC has awarded contracts of authorized letters of intent is estimated at over 1 billion barrels of oil equivalent over their useful lives.

Each and every one of these private sector initiatives were advanced in good faith in response to a national imperative. Current private sector commitments to the SFC's Basic Business Plan are an estimated $11.4 billion. An additional $3.78 billion is being projected for contingencies and other projects. When all these nongovernment-owned projects have proceeded to completion approximately $14.77 billion in private sector funds will have been invested in America's energy future.

When the SFC had an operating quorum it is reported that the project sponsors were expending approximately $13.4 million per week. In the absense of a working board quorum these private sector monies are now at risk.

Beginning in December 1982 (H. Rept. 97-978), the Congress, in the conference report on the Interior Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1983, expressed concern with respect to the slow progress of the SFC in awarding financial assistance.

Subsequently in November 1983, during consideration of the Further Continuing Appropriations Act for 1984, the Congress reiterated its concern and reasserted its intent and commitment to the "goals and objectives of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation as expressed in the Energy Security Act."

In addition, it was the judgment of the conferees that, "the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is the appropriate Federal entity to assist and facilitate early production of synthetic fuels." That is still the judgment of the Congress.

The private sector approach intended by the Congress in enacting the Energy Security Act has been achieved and maintained by the SFC. Currently there are billions of dollars of private capital on the table. This equity was raised by the private sector in response to the national security imperative that underlies the SFC's program. And this equity may well be lost if the program does not proceed.

In addition to the national security benefits, there are the social and economic benefits to be realized from creation of a synthetic fuels infrastructure in the United States.

There is considerable environmental protection experience that is to be gained from the permitting and operation of these initial projects. The SFC's environmental program offers great potential for mitigation any adverse environmental consequences from deployment of such technologies.

Synthetic fuels are in fact an integral part of any solution to our present or future environmental problems. But sound environmental management can best be achieved under a deliberate program, unhastened by the crisis atmosphere that would occur if there were a major disruption of oil imports.

There are three important environmental reasons to develop synthetic fuels technologies:

First, no proposals will receive assistance from the SFC unless it can demonstrate that it can obtain all required environmental permits as dictated by Federal and State law. If such permits cannot be obtained, the SFC's policy dictates that such projects not receive any assistance from the Corporation.

Second, before a binding commitment for financial assistance can be made there must be established a sound environmental monitoring program, with the assistance of the EPA, the DOE, and State regulatory agencies.

Third, synthetic fuels are an integral part of the solution to our present and future environmental problems. For example, synthetic fuels technologies, such as those employed by the cool water project in California, offer the potential for substantially reduced atmospheric emissions of sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides compared to conventional means for the generation of electricity from coal. This technology also can be readily replicated by many of our Nation's utilities in smaller units in rural as well as urban areas.

There also is the engineering and economic experience that is to be obtained from the operation of these initial synthetic fuels projects.

And there are the jobs that will be created: First, in the States where the projects will be sited; and, second, in those States where project components will be fabricated. As much as 70 percent of the capital costs of a synthetic fuels plant will be spent on equipment and materials such as steel, cement, pipe, and instrumentation. These requirements will both maintain existing jobs and create new jobs. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics for every $1 billion spent on heavy construction projects, such as synthetic fuels, approximately 30,000 full-time and part-time jobs are created. Thus the current projects pending before the Synthetic Fuels Corporation could generate over 400,000 jobs.

Synthetic fuels plants also will consume large amounts of domestically produced equipment and materials. As much as 70 percent of the capital costs of a synthetic fuels plant will be spent on equipment and materials such as steel, cement, pipe, and instrumentation.

Presently, some 25 States are affected by companies or corporations involved in synthetic fuels projects currently pending before the SFC. Those States are: Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

From this perspective it is easy to understand why the Energy and Environment Committee of the National Governors Association approved a resolution on June 30, 1984, expressing support for this important program. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the NGA resolution appear at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the text was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GOVERNORS ASSOCIATION SYNFUELS RESOLUTION

The governors continue to support a federal role in financing the development of diverse synthetic fuels technologies, including those technologies which utilize Eastern coal resources. Agreements which have been the result of long negotiations and significant expenditures by industry applicants and the SFC should not be threatened by management problems or congressional attempts to cut back on our commitment to synthetic fuels. The governors believe that all letters of intent which have been authorized or signed by the SFC should be honored and that the Administration should act immediately to reconstitute the Board of Directors and to solve any outstanding management problems.

Project applications which have been submitted to date to the SFC in response to solicitations should also be given expedited consideration since these project sponsors have invested extensive time, work and funding in the preparation of their application. Congress should fund the SFC at a level adequate to allow a meaningful review of these good faith applications and development of the most meritorious projects.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, if the benefits I have mentioned are to be realized the SFC must be permitted to complete statutory Phase I.

For these reasons, and others, I have been working for months with my colleagues, the distinguished minority leader [Mr. BYRD], the ranking minority member of Committee on Energy and Natural Resources [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], and others, to achieve a compromise with the administration on a funding proposal that would permit the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to proceed with its program. That agreement with the administration has been reached. And it is reflected in the subject Appropriations Committee amendment. In addition, the compromise is reflected in fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution as reported yesterday by the Appropriations Committee, and the Senate report related thereto (S. Rept. 98-634).

Yesterday, when I offered the amendment in the Appropriations Committee, it also was sponsored by Senator JOHNSTON, Senator BYRD, Senator WARNER, Senator ARMSTRONG, Senator FORD, Senator ANDREWS, Senator GARN, and Senator BURDICK. At this point in time, the supporters of the compromise also include Senator DOMENICI, Senator PERCY, Senator COHEN, Senator HUDDLESTON, Senator HATCH, Senator METZENBAUM, and Senator HEINZ.

Briefly the amendment provides for a rescission of $5.2 billion of the obligational authority available to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Combined with the earlier rescission of $2 billion, this makes a total rescission of $7.2 billion. Of the $5.2 billion rescinded, $750 million is set aside in a Clean Coal Technology Reserve for clean coal technology demonstration activities, including those identified in section 320 of this measure.

Of the $8.2 billion in the Energy Security Reserve, $5.7 billion would be set aside for commitment or obligation to those projects which already have authorized or signed letters of intent. If any of these funds remain after the Corporation has completed action on the projects with letters of intent, by either the commitment or obligation of financial assistance or by otherwise completing action on the letters of intent, then 50 percent of the remaining balance shall thereafter be available for commitment or obligation by the SFC, and 50 percent shall cease to be available for obligation by the SFC. An additional $2.5 billion is available to the SFC for new projects and other authorized activities. Once a contract or commitment is executed, it, and the funds associated with such commitment or contract, would be treated like any other contract or commitment of funds. There no longer would be any distinction between that or any other contract.

This compromise recognizes that the letters of intent currently authorized or signed are not final agreements for financial assistance; it recognizes that the parties need flexibility in arriving at the final contracts, and changes are going to occur in the terms and conditions, and project structure, during negotiations. However, as long as the projects assisted are substantially the same as those for which the Board previously authorized letters of intent, funding would be from the $5.7 billion. This recognizes that the form of financial assistance, size and project sponsorship may change, and that the project's technological processes may be substituted for substantially the same processes.

The compromise also provides that until the comprehensive strategy pursuant to section 126 of the Energy Security Act is approved pursuant to that act, the SFC may issue new solicitation and shall make additional awards of financial assistance without regard to the national synthetic fuels production goal in section 125 of the Energy Security Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of that compromise and the accompanying committee report language (S. Rept. 98-634, pages 26 to 29) be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks, along with the September 25 letter of administration support from the Director of Office of Management and Budget, David A. Stockman.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SYNFUELS AMENDMENT

1. Rescind $5.2 billion of the funds appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve.

2. Of the $5.2 billion rescinded from the Energy Security Reserve, $750 million shall be deposited and retained in a separate account in the Treasury, entitled the "Clean Coal Technology Reserve", to be available for the purpose of conducting coal technology development activities, including sec. 320 of the Interior Bill subject to subsequent appropriation in the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act.

3. $5.7 billion of the remaining funds in the Energy Security Reserve shall be initially available only for obligation to projects with Letters of Intent authorized by the S.F.C Board of Directors on or before June 1, 1984. There may be a remaining balance of the $5.7 billion, by reason of Board determinations that the Corporation will not enter into financial assistance contracts with projects for which Letters of Intent were authorized or that lesser amounts of financial assistance than those specified in such authorizations shall be awarded. If there is such a remaining balance, 50% of the balance shall no longer be available for obligation and the remaining 50% shall thereafter be available for commitment or obligation by the S.F.C. pursuant to the Energy Security Act.

4. Until such time as the comprehensive strategy is approved pursuant to the Energy Security Act, S.F.C. shall solicit proposals and award financial assistance under the Energy Security Act without regard to the national synthetic fuel production goal in section 125 of the Act.

REPORT 98-634—CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1985

RESCISSION

The United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation has been the subject of continued congressional review over the past fiscal year. Since April 1984, the Board of Directors of the Corporation has not had the quorum legally required by the Energy Security Act to make awards of financial assistance, adopt a comprehensive strategy or take other major actions, because of resignations of several directors this year. The administration has not acted thus far to fill any of the five vacant Director positions and restore a working quorum to the Board. Consequently, the SFC currently is not legally capable of further action to implement the national synthetic fuels program of the Energy Security Act.

The President on May 14, 1984, announced a new administration synthetic fuels policy and subsequently transmitted to the Congress the implementing legislation on May 25, 1984. The proposed legislation would rescind $9,000,000,000 from the energy security reserve and also would require that projects supported by use of the remaining funds be limited to those that produce fuels whose prices will not be significantly above projected market prices of competing fuels. Administration officials have indicated that there would be administration action to fill the vacant Director positions and restore a working quorum to the Board of Directors, only after Congress resolved the funding and policy issues related to the SFC.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Public Law 98-369, was passed by the Congress in late June. The act includes in section 2103 a rescission of $2,000,000,000 from the energy security reserve, of which $1,155,000,000 was derived from the unused portion of the SFC commitment of financial assistance previously awarded to the Old Shale Co., for the Colony Shale Oil project. The Comptroller General has ruled previously that pursuant to the Energy Security Act the $1,155,000,000 remained available to the SFC, since the Colony project has been abandoned prior to use of those funds. The conference report (House Report 98-861, H.R. 4170) at page 1286 stated, "The rescission is agreed to with the understanding that the five vacancies on the Board of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation will be filled with qualified individuals and that the Board will submit to the appropriate committee of the Congress a plan for the future operations of the Corporation." As noted above, the administration has not acted yet to fill those vacancies.

The House of Representatives on June 29, 1984, passed H.R. 5973, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes. H.R. 5973 includes in title II—related agencies, under the heading Department of the Treasury, a further rescission of $5,000,000,000 from the energy security reserve. Additionally, the rescission is accompanied by a proviso that none of the remaining funds in the energy security reserve shall be available to the SFC for the Union II or Cathedral Bluffs oil shale project.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

The Committee recommendation contains a compromise proposal developed with the administration, which is intended to resolve the issues-related to the SFC. The amendment was adopted on the basis of an expressed commitment by the administration that prompt executive action would be taken to fill the vacancies on the SFC Board of Directors and restore a working quorum by nomination or recess appointment, when a conference report that embodies the compromise is filed. The provision also was adopted on the basis of an administration commitment that the compromise proposal satisfies the administration's objectives in synthetic fuels policy and substantially implements the President's proposal of May 14. Thus, the Committee intends that the provision will resolve the SFC issues for Congress and the administration, including funding, policy, and executive action on Director vacancies. Such a resolution will restore much needed stability and confidence in the national synthetic fuels program and the SFC.

The Committee recommendation includes the following elements.

1. $5,200,000,000 of the funds appropriated to the energy security reserve is rescinded.

2. Of the $5,200,000,000 rescinded from the energy security reserve, $750,000,000 shall be deposited and retained in a separate account in the Treasury, entitled the "Clean coal technology reserve," to be available for the purpose of conducting clean coal technology demonstration activities, including those identified in section 320 of H.R. 5973 reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, subject to subsequent annual appropriation in the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act.

3. $5,700,000,000 of the remaining funds in the energy security reserve shall be initially available only for obligation to projects with letters of intent authorized by the SFC Board of Directors on or before June 1, 1984. There may be a remaining balance of the $5,700,000,000, by reason of Board determinations that the Corporation will not enter into financial assistance contracts with projects for which letters of intent were authorized or that lesser amounts of financial assistance than those specified in such authorizations shall be awarded. If there is such a remaining balance, 50 percent of the balance shall cease to be available for obligation and the remaining 50 percent shall thereafter be available for commitment or obligation by the SFC pursuant to the Energy Security Act.

4. Uncommitted authority totaling approximately $2,500,000,000 in the energy security reserve would remain available for obligation by SFC under the Energy Security Act for new projects, to supplement the $5,700,000,000 for projects with authorized letters of intent, and other authorized activities to the act.

5. Until such time as the comprehensive strategy is approved pursuant to the Energy Security Act, SFC shall solicit proposals and award financial assistance under the Energy Security Act without regard to the national synthetic fuels production goal in section 125 of the act.

In limiting the initial availability of $5,700,000,000 of the remaining SFC funds for obligation to projects for the Corporation's Board of Directors has authorized letter of intent, the Committee recognizes that project sponsors have expended significant sums and time in the development of their projects to the Corporation's letter of intent stage, on the basis of the original appropriations available under the Energy Security Act. The recommendation accordingly sets aside the $5,700,000,000 so that these projects can be funded, once the projects have satisfied the statutory criteria in the Energy Security Act for an SFC contract, including an affirmative vote of the SFC Board of Directors to award financial assistance. These earmarked appropriations would be reduced if there is a remaining balance which is not used for all such projects. Any remaining balance would be calculated after the Board had made determinations with regard to all of the projects which have authorized letters of intent as of June 1, 1984, as to whether the Corporation will enter into financial contracts. The Committee recognizes, moreover, that during the delay and uncertainty created by the absense of a quorum of the Corporation's Board, projects for which letters of intent have been authorized may have experienced or may experience changes in size, in sponsorship, and in the amounts, forms, and terms of assistance needed from the Corporation. Notwithstanding such changes, the Committee intends that the fund so earmarked for those projects for which letters of intent have been authorized will be available for funding such projects, without the necessity of reopening competition, should the Corporation's Board determine that assistance should otherwise be awarded to such projects.

The Committee recognizes that economic and technological developments since passage of the Energy Security Act in 1980, together with the reduction in the funds available for obligational authority by the Corporation, cast doubt on the feasibility of achieving the statutory production goals of section 125 within the time period specified in that section. Accordingly, until the Corporation reports to Congress on a comprehensive strategy related to the production goals of the act, and the Congress and the President approve such a strategy or act on whatever alternative recommendations the Corporation may propose, the amendment provides that the attainment of the production goals is not required to be a factor in making solicitations or further awards of financial assistance in phase I of the Corporation's program under the act. As a result, from enactment of the amendment until approval of the comprehensive strategy, the Board would not be required by paragraph 131(b)(2) of the act to select proposals which, in the judgment of the Board, are most advantageous in meeting the national synthetic fuels production goal. The Board, however, would retain discretion, under paragraph 131(b)(3) and other applicable sections of the act, to consider the amount of synthetic fuel production by a proposed project as a relevant factor in the award of financial assistance. Also, consistent with other specified factors under the act, the Board would still have the discretion to utilize the funds available to the SFC to obtain an optimum amount of aggregate synthetic fuels production from all projects awarded financial assistance, as necessary to achieve the purposes of title I of the Energy Security Act apart from the production goal of section 125.

Section 131(b)(2)(A) of the Energy Security Act specifies that performance in the selection of proposals for financial assistance be given to the proposal which represents the least commitment of financial assistance by the Corporation and the lowest unit production cost within a given technological process, taking into account the amount and value of the anticipated synthetic fuel products. Section 131(b)(3) requires that the Corporation shall also consider, in awarding financial assistance, among other relevant factors—(b)(i) the potential cost per barrel or unit production of synthetic fuel from the proposed synthetic fuel project and (B)(ii) the overall production potential of the technology, considering the potential for replication, the extent of the resource and its geographic distribution and the potential end use. In satisfying these and other applicable requirements of the Energy Security Act, it is intended that the Corporation consider whether projects supported by the Corporation will be likely to continue to operate after SFC financial assistance ends. As part of that consideration, the Corporation would complete an analysis of the projected economic viability of the project over the life of the project, taking into account the projected project operating and maintenance costs and the projected market price of competing fuels.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE
OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 25, 1984.

Hon. JAMES A. MCCLURE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am pleased to respond to your request for a statement of the Administration's views on the synthetic fuels proposal presented in your letter of September 21, 1984.

As described in your letter, the amendment would:

Rescind an additional $5.2 billion from the Energy Security Reserve for a total rescission of $7.2 billion including the provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984;

establish within the remaining balance a reserve of $5.7 billion for projects with approved Letters of Intent; one-half of the unused balance of this reserve will lapse, while the other half will be available for obligation in the discretion of the Board of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation;

establish a new appropriations reserve of $750 million to be available upon subsequent appropriation for coal research;

suspend the production goals of the Energy Security Act.

The President's synthetic fuels policy statement of May 14, 1984, had two fundamental objectives. The first was to achieve a major budget savings by curtailing the total obligations of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The second was to provide a focus for congressional debate over the appropriate scope of the federal synthetic fuels program so that the nation can move forward in developing the capability to produce synthetic fuels.

We remain convinced that the President's original proposal would leave in place a strong synthetic fuels program and represents the soundest policy. By avoiding the earmarking of funds for specific projects, the simple rescission would leave the Board of the SFC free to design a new plan for the use of its funds that reflects the reduced total funding.

Nevertheless, given the constructive movement to date in resolving legitimate differences over the revision of national synfuels policy, the time has come for a final resolution of the remaining issues. Your proposal represents very substantial progress toward the goals established by the President's statement. The proposed rescission of $5.2 billion, in conjunction with prior congressional action and future amounts that will lapse as a result of the disposition of the Letter of Intent projects, will result in a total synfuels funding adjustment approximately consistent with the President's request.

We continue to have concerns about the need for the $750 million reserve. This provision would be acceptable, however, in order to achieve enactment of a satisfactory compromise and on the basis of your assurance that it is designed to provide a reliable source of budget authority in FY 1986 and future years for our on-going efforts in the area of coal and fossil research and development.

You also inquired about the present status of the nominations to fill the five current vacancies on the Board of Directors of the Corporation. Because of the concerns expressed repeatedly by a number of Senators, I believe it was apparent to most observers that a resolution of the questions surrounding the future policy direction of the SFC was an important precondition to the confirmation of new Board members. The adoption of your compromise proposal by the Senate and its incorporation in a conference Report would provide the policy debate that your colleagues have stated must precede action on filling the vacancies. We would thus be able to announce nominations to the Board within a few days of final action on the rescission. Because of the importance of restoring a quorum to the SFC Board, we plan to monitor closely the confirmation process. Should the Senate schedule force an unacceptably long delay in confirmation, we would consult you and your colleagues on the jurisdictional committee on the appropriateness of using the President's authority to make recess appointments.

We sincerely appreciate your efforts to forge a consensus on issues relating to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I hope that I have responded fully to your request for a clarification of the Administration's views. Please let me know if there are any further questions.

With all best wishes,

Yours very truly,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN, Director.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, in addition to the committee amendment it is the intention of the floor managers to accept an amendment by Senator METZENBAUM which contains a statutory clarification of the application to the SFC of the standards of ethical conduct and financial reporting as set forth in Executive Order 11222. In addition, the amendment would clarify the application of judicial review of SFC actions relating to public access to information and public meetings. These clarifications reflect concerns raised by Senators METZENBAUM and COHEN, and others.

Mr. President, as I mentioned, this overall compromise has been accepted by the administration. In addition, administration officials have indicated that actions would be taken to fill the vacant Board of Director positions once the compromise has been passed by the Senate and accepted in conference with the House.

These actions by the Congress and the administration will restore the much needed stability and confidence in the National Synthetic Fuels Program.

This compromise has bipartisan support, Mr. President. That support is reflected in the Dear Colleague letter that has been distributed. The signators are Senators BYRD, FORD, DOMENICI, PERCY, ARMSTRONG, BURDICK, GARN, HUDDLESTON, HATCH, WARNER, and myself. I ask unanimous consent that it be included in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

Mr. President, I urge the support of my colleagues for this compromise, which is in the best interest of our Nation. The compromise will assure continued progress in our national synthetic fuels program, while avoiding potentially unnecessary expenditures.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, September 25, 1984.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: In May of this year President Reagan transmitted legislation to the Congress limiting the funds and authorities of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation (SFC) by rescinding $9 billion of its authority and modifying its procedures. After lengthy discussions with representatives of the Administration a compromise proposal has been fashioned, which has been accepted by the Administration, and we would like to provide you with the legislative specifications for the proposal (attached). This compromise will be placed before the Senate for its consideration as an Appropriations Committee amendment to either the Fiscal Year 1985 Continuing Resolution or the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, Fiscal Year 1985, which ever occurs first.

This compromise preserves the original intent of the SFC to put in place a limited but diverse set of technologies, demonstrating at a commercial scale that this country can utilize its oil, shale, coal, tar sands, and heavy oil resources. The results promise to resolve outstanding environmental and financial uncertainties, thus permitting future development to be more fully in control of the private sector.

As announced in May, the President is committed to fill the vacancies on the Board of Directors of the SFC once a legislative resolution of the program issues, impeding the progress of the SFC, has been reached. Failure to restore the Board to a working quorum in the near future risks destroying nearly $2 billion in private investments already in place for those projects pending at the SFC. The Administration is committed, in letter of September 25, 1984, from the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, David A. Stockman, to nominate Directors to the SFC once the compromise has been passed by the Senate and accepted in Conference with the House.

Briefly, the amendment provides for a rescission of $5.2 billion of the funds available to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Combined with the rescission of $2 billion earlier this year, this makes a total rescission of $7.2 billion. Of the $5.2 billion rescinded, $750 million would be set aside for clean coal technology demonstration activities, including those identified in section 320 of the Fiscal Year 1985 Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act.

With the remaining $8.2 billion in the Energy Security Reserve, $5.7 billion would be set aside for those projects which already have authorized or signed Letters of Intent (LOI's), as a preliminary step towards signing a contract. If any of these funds remain after the Corporation has completed action on the projects with LOI's (by entering into contracts or by otherwise completing action on the LOI's) 50 percent would remain available for use by the SFC. The balance of $2.5 billion in the Energy Security Reserve would be available for new projects and other authorized activities.

In addition, the floor managers intend to accept an amendment by Senator Metzenbaum to the compromise with a statutory clarification of the application of (1) the standards of ethical conduct and financial reporting as set forth in Executive Order 11222 and (2) judicial review of SFC actions relating to public access to information and public meetings. These clarifications reflect concerns raised by Senator Metzenbaum and Senator Cohen, and others.

We urge you to join with us in supporting this compromise which will assure continued progress in our national synthetic fuels program, while avoiding potentially unnecessary expenditures.

Sincerely,

Pete Domenici, Wendell Ford, Charles H. Percy, Quentin Burdick, Walter D. Huddleston, Jim McClure, Robert C. Byrd, Bill Armstrong, Jake Garn, Orrin Hatch, and John Warner.

SYNTHETIC FUELS CORPORATION COMPROMISE AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I support the bipartisan compromise on the Synthetic Fuels Corporation contained in the committee amendment to the fiscal year 1985 Interior Appropriations bill. Let me first commend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for his efforts to work out this compromise agreement, and for his perseverance in working to secure the administration's support. Let me also express my appreciation for the substantial contributions of Senators JOHNSTON, METZENBAUM, FORD, HUDDLESTON, and HART in the development of some of the key elements of this compromise agreement.

I have long been an advocate of the development of synthetic fuels from the vast reserves of coal in West Virginia and other States. Thus, I am a strong supporter of the synthetic fuels program and the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The development of synthetic fuels technology is, I believe, an important component of an insurance policy against oil disruptions that would threaten the Nation's energy security.

It is unfortunate that, almost from its first days, the SFC has been embroiled in controversy, largely involving the propriety of the activities of particular members of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation Board of Directors. Indeed, several months ago controversy ultimately reached such levels that resignations from the Board left the agency without a quorum to conduct business. As a result, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has been crippled since last spring.

I believe that the compromise being offered here represents the best opportunity for getting America's synthetic fuels development program back on track. The compromise would rescind $5.2 billion from the Energy Security Reserve, and still leave enough for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to conduct a balanced program. Of equal importance, the administration has indicated its support for this package, and its intention to nominate individuals to fill the vacant positions on the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's Board of Directors.

I would also point out that this compromise addresses two important opportunities with respect to the use of this country's vast coal resources. First, after the rescission of $5.2 billion, there are sufficient funds remaining in the Energy Security Reserve to support synthetic fuels projects using eastern bituminous coals. Second, the package provides for the establishment of a $750 million Clean Coal Technology Reserve to support, on a multi-year basis, clean coal technology demonstration activities, including those identified in section 320 of the fiscal year 1985 Department of the Interior Appropriations Act. That section of the Interior bill is a modified version of "The Coal Science, Technology and Engineering Act" (S. 1925), which I introduced almost 1 year ago on October 6, 1983, and which had a hearing before the Energy Research and Development Subcommittee on April 9, 1984.

As in my coal technology bill, the $750 million Clean Coal Technology Reserve will provide a basis for joint efforts, involving the private sector and the Department of Energy, to accelerate the development of advanced technologies which will contribute to the combustion and use of coal in an environmentally acceptable manner. The commercial application of advanced coal technologies, such as fluidized bed combustion, and limestone injection multistage burners—that is, the LIMB technology—offer efficient and cost-effective approaches to the reduction of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions from coal combustion. Sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides from coal combustion are often mentioned in connection with the problem of acid rain. The demonstration and eventual widespread commercial application of such technologies represent an important opportunity for achieving emissions reductions over the long term in a cost-effective and efficient manner.

Mr. President, this compromise will enable the Nation to move forward once again with its synthetic fuels program and will help promote the development of clean coal technologies which will enable us to use America's vast coal resources in an environmentally acceptable manner.

I urge my colleagues to support this compromise.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, in four decades of congressional service I have learned because energy is critical to every sector of our society, there is no way to design one policy to solve all energy problems simultaneously. There is no perfect solution. This by and large is good because a policy in constant transition is better in many ways than a rigid inflexible policy. If we accept the premise there will always be some uncertainty in our energy future, we retain the positive ability to shift our direction as a result of technological discoveries or presently unknown reserves which could supply clean, secure, and abundant energy alternatives. This amendment totally neutralizes these positive technological results.

I introduced the Synthetic Liquid Fuels Act (H.R. 3209) in the fall of 1943. It allowed Government to give incentives and encourage a new and necessary industry over the threshold by nurturing uneconomic private industry for noneconomic benefits to the general public—including security of supply and foreign policy leverage. We would have also gained experience in this type of industrial endeavor and information on which to base further public policy.

Unfortunately, this new industry never materialized. Why? Because, in 1955 the decision was made to eliminate all Government involvement in coal gasification and other alternative energy projects. President Eisenhower ordered the program ended on the assumption if needed, private industry would anticipate and correctly respond to assure the Nation had adequate fuel supplies. After spending $82 million on synfuels pilot projects over 10 years, $3 million was returned—or rescinded—to the Federal Treasury, and the whole program was shut down.

It took 25 years before. In 1980, the Energy Security Act was approved as a second phase of our new national energy plan to reinstitute a viable synthetic fuels industry. The new act provided authorization for a beginning phase of $20 billion, and a second phase allowing for $68 billion to be used to create a synthetic fuels industry. Thus, we had again created the potential to recapture the initiative provided initially on April 5, 1944. I am convinced if the Carter administration had continued we would now be breaking ground for a number of plants to provide alternative fuels for the Nation. But it is now clear we will not continue this innovating, exciting, and crucial energy course. We are now seeing history repeat itself in negative fashion. On May 14, 1984, President Reagan, much like President Eisenhower before him, recommended a $9 billion rescission of funds for synthetic fuels projects. This amounts to about three-quarters of obligational authority remaining in the beginning phase of the program. Allegedly, the main reason for such action was because of mismanagement by those people the sitting President hand picked to administer the organization.

In the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Congress has already agreed to a $2 billion rescission, of which $1.15 billion was from uncommitted funds under a Tosco loan guarantee. This action left Synthetic Fuels Corporation with a base program of $13.25 billion of remaining obligational authority, and serves as sufficient warning that Congress expects more effective management of the Synfuels Program by Corporation staff.

Many Members of the 99th Congress will want to rework the Energy Security Act, when the Synthetic Fuels Corporation submits its comprehensive strategy to Congress, and many in the administration want to see it abolished entirely. Until the world energy situation begins to deteriorate again, I believe we will continue to allow promotion of a national synfuels policy that is less supportive than the policy established in the Energy Security Act. In the absence of 3-hour gasoline lines and constituents' complaints, most believe they can afford to neglect or to reduce Federal support for synfuels commercialization.

No doubt, a large national synfuels effort will evolve. World events and political realities will once again push the pendulum toward a positive synfuel development policy. When the energy situation becomes critical again we will ask ourselves: "Wouldn't it be better to maintain a consistent national synfuels policy rather than being left unprepared to deal with long-term shortages?"

We will look with envy at the Republic of South Africa, with its three operating commercial synfuels plants, supplying more than 40 percent of their liquid energy needs, because that nation maintained a consistent national synfuels policy.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the chairman of the Energy Committee yield?

Mr. McCLURE. I yield the floor.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the chairman yield for a question?

Mr. McCLURE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. NICKLES. I apologize for coming just a couple minutes beyond the time that you were possibly trying to get a vote. I did not know we were going to try to get a vote in right before 6 o'clock.

I have a couple of questions. Is the amendment of the Senator from Idaho pending or the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McCLURE. The amendment which I and others offered at the committee markup of the continuing resolution meeting yesterday and which was adopted by the Appropriations Committee as part of the continuing resolution has been offered and modified into the bill. It is part of the bill before us today. The Senator from New Jersey has offered an amendment, which I understand the Senator from Oklahoma has cosponsored, and it is that substitute to the committee amendment which is now the pending business.

Mr. NICKLES. So the pending business would be the Bradley-Nickles amendment, which is a substitute for the McClure amendment?

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. Basically, we are looking at two proposals. The most significant difference, at least as far as this Senator is concerned, pertains to the rescission amounts. The Bradley-Nickles amendment would rescind $9 billion from the Synfuels Corporation and the McClure amendment, the underlying amendment, would rescind $5.2 billion.

Mr. McCLURE. If the Senator would yield, the committee amendment would rescind $5.2 billion of the money previously appropriated to the energy security reserve account in addition to the $2 billion that was earlier rescinded, making a total rescission of $7.2 billion.

It also provides that, of the money which was made available for expenditure for the projects which were identified in the Board action in their April meeting, if any of those projects lapsed, 50 percent of the money that would otherwise be expended for the total of those projects would no longer be available for commitment by action of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. So the ultimate amount of money that would be left available would depend upon the success of the projects' sponsors and the Synthetic Fuel Corporation Board being able to move forward those projects which were identified in their April meeting.

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator would yield further, under the chairman's amendment, how much money would Synfuels have remaining in their account for future projects, either with letters of intent or additional projects?

Mr. McCLURE. The answer would be $8.2 billion.

Mr. NICKLES. $8.2 billion?

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. Is it also correct that in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey and myself there would be approximately $4.2 billion?

Mr. McCLURE. I think that is approximately correct.

Mr. NICKLES. The Senator mentioned the fact that we have already rescinded $2 billion and that has become law. Is it not also a fact that because of the Tosco project, cancellation of that project, that that was about $1.155 billion which they basically applied, so the real net rescission, the amount of money the Treasury saved, was only $850 million and not $2 billion?

Mr. McCLURE. It was our view at the time the earlier action was taken that the $2 billion was the total amount rescinded and the amount of money available from Tosco remained available to the Corporation. The Comptroller General had made that ruling. That was reflected in the debate that was had at the time the $2 billion was rescinded.

Mr. NICKLES. I just want to make that clear because I think there has been some confusion between people talking about rescinding.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the Senator from New Jersey laid the amendment down?

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes, the amendment has been laid down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been laid down.

Mr. NICKLES. So it is now the pending business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague and good friend, the Senator from New Jersey, in supporting this amendment. I think it is important that we do so.

The essence of this amendment, the meat of the amendment that we have, is a rescission of $9 billion. Earlier today we passed by a voice vote—this Senator dissented—a budget resolution that provides for budget deficits of $180 billion, $190 billion, over $200 billion in the next 3 years. The budget deficits are escalating, not declining.

Several of us feel as though we need to make some reductions, we need to save some money. This is one area where we can save money. We can rescind several billion dollars.

I compliment Senator McCLURE. He says, "Let's rescind $5.2 billion." I think that is a step in the right direction. Most of us should know that the House of Representatives has already passed in this same bill a rescission of $5 billion. The amendment that Senator BRADLEY and I have introduced would rescind $9 billion. So we are talking about how much money we can save. Everybody, or it seems like most everybody, has agreed that we can save some money. Mr. President, the amendment that we have introduced is an amendment that is supported, or certainly was at one time supported, by the President.

We introduced the amendment on behalf of the administration. I ask unanimous consent that the statement by the President to the Congress of the United States supporting this rescission be included in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Today I am pleased to transmit to the Congress the "Energy Security Reserve Amendments of 1984," legislation to implement the new synthetic fuels policy that I announced on May 14, 1984.

This legislation reaffirms the Nation's commitment to a long-range program of developing a private-sector synthetic fuels industry while recognizing that improvements in the energy outlook can permit us to achieve a major reduction in Federal spending through prudent realignments in the program.

When the Congress established the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in 1980, making available a total of $19 billion for related activities, oil prices were projected to reach $75 to $125 per barrel by 1990; America was dependent on imported oil for 18 percent of its energy supply; and the memories of gas lines lingered.

Synthetic fuels held promise as an economically competitive alternative to traditional fuel sources. Proponents of the current law argued that the Federal program would have little or no impact on the deficit and established an extremely rapid and ambitious schedule for developing a commercial synthetic fuels industry.

In the intervening years, the energy outlook has improved dramatically. The price of imported crude oil has declined more than 25 percent since I took office, and our oil imports are down 33 percent compared to 1980 levels. The Strategic Petroleum Reserve, at nearly 400 million barrels, provides more than 80 days protection against a total disruption of our imports and over 200 days if OPEC halted supplies—in 1980, it provided less than 17 days protection. The energy conservation efforts of the American people have far exceeded expectations, further enhancing our energy situation.

As a consequence of these major changes, the presumptions that underlie the current synthetic fuels program have proven at variance with the realities of the market place. It is now apparent that developing a commercial synthetic fuels industry at the pace envisioned by the Energy Security Act of 1980 would require enormous direct budget outlays that would not be offset by any economic benefits.

Proceeding down the path set by current law would thus result in the inefficient use of billions of dollars. It would also grossly distort the market place for synthetic fuels, possibly creating an industry that would be permanently dependent on government subsidies, not the commercially viable industry envisioned by Congress in 1980.

The "Energy Security Reserve Amendments of 1984" reflect an effort to strike a balance between avoiding wasteful expenditures and preserving an appropriate national synthetic fuels program. The legislation would rescind $9 billion of the $19 billion originally appropriated. It would also require that projects supported by use of the remaining funds be limited to those that produce fuels whose prices will not be significantly above projected market prices of competing fuels.

At the same time, the legislation leaves completely intact the administrative structure for the synthetic fuels program. By continuing to use the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, we can avoid unnecessary delay and disruption in the national's effort of ensuring synthetic fuels commercialization.

Swift passage of this legislation will make a major contribution to reducing the Federal deficit in the years ahead while putting the synthetic fuels program on a sounder footing.

I urge the Congress to act expeditiously in its consideration of this legislation.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 25, 1984.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the Chair's cooperation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is further recognized.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate again the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter coming from the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Stockman, dated September 25, to Senator JIM McCLURE, be entered in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE
OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 25, 1984.

Hon. JAMES A. McCLURE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am pleased to respond to your request for a statement of the Administration's views on the synthetic fuels proposal presented in your letter of September 21, 1984.

As described in your letter, the amendment would:

Rescind and additional $5.2 billion from the Energy Security Reserve for a total rescission of $7.2 billion including the provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984;

Establish within the remaining balance a reserve of $5.7 billion for projects with approved Letters of Intent; one-half of the unused balance of this reserve will lapse, while the other half will be available for obligation in the discretion of the Board of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation;

Establish a new appropriations reserve of $750 million to be available upon subsequent appropriation for coal research;

Suspend the production goals of the Energy Security Act.

The President's synthetic fuels policy statement of May 14, 1984, had two fundamental objectives. The first was to achieve a major budget savings by curtailing the total obligations of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The second was to provide a focus for congressional debate over the appropriate scope of the federal synthetic fuels program so that the nation can move forward in developing the capability to produce synthetic fuels.

We remain convinced that the President's original proposal would leave in place a strong synthetic fuels program and represents the soundest policy. By avoiding the earmarking of funds for specific projects, the simple rescission would leave the Board of the SFC free to design a new plan for the use of its funds that reflects the reduced total funding.

Nevertheless, given the constructive movement to date in resolving legitimate differences over the revision of national synfuels policy, the time has come for a final resolution of the remaining issues. Your proposal represents very substantial progress toward the goals established by the President's statement. The proposed rescission of $5.2 billion, in conjunction with prior congressional action and future amounts that will lapse as a result of the disposition of the Letter of Intent projects, will result in a total synfuels funding adjustment approximately consistent with the President's request.

We continue to have concerns about the need for the $750 million reserve. This provision would be acceptable, however, in order to achieve enactment of a satisfactory compromise and on the basis of your assurance that it is designed to provide a reliable source of budget authority in FY 1986 and future years for our on-going efforts in the area of coal and fossil research and development.

You also inquired about the present status of the nominations to fill the five current vacancies on the Board of Directors of the Corporation. Because of the concerns expressed repeatedly by a number of Senators, I believe it was apparent to most observers that a resolution of the questions surrounding the future policy direction of the SFC was an important precondition to the confirmation of new Board members. The adoption of your compromise proposal by the Senate and its incorporation in a conference Report would provide the policy debate that your colleagues have stated must precede action on filling the vacancies. We would thus be able to announce nominations to the Board within a few days of final action on the rescission. Because of the importance of restoring a quorum to the SFC Board, we plan to monitor closely the confirmation process. Should the Senate schedule force an unacceptably long delay in confirmation, we would consult you and your colleagues on the jurisdictional committee on the appropriateness of using the President's authority to make recess appointments.

We sincerely appreciate your efforts to forge a consensus on issues relating to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I hope that I have responded fully to your request for a clarification of the Administration's views. Please let me know if there are any further questions.

With all best wishes,

Yours very truly,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, to give the essence of it, I will read from one paragraph of it:

> We remain convinced that the President's original proposal would leave in place a strong synthetic fuels program and represents the soundest policy.

Mr. President, the President's original proposal was to rescind $9 billion.

Mr. President, we get into the question of how much are we going to rescind? Senator BRADLEY, myself, Senator HUMPHREY, and others say, "Let us rescind $9 billion." Several of my colleagues have asked, would that leave a Synfuels Program? Yes. It would. It would leave in Synfuels an additional $4.262 billion for additional remaining contracts. They could fund contracts that they have already signed letters of intent for. There are some uncommitted funds that are scheduled for new projects. There are some unsigned letters of intent. They would have $4.262 billion that they could commit toward those projects.

Mr. President, already available and transferred from the Department of Energy is $4.249 billion. So as you see, we have been spending substantial billions for synthetic fuels development already. This Senator is not opposed to the Synfuels Program. I am opposed to massive Federal Government subsidies and price guarantees for projects that are not economically feasible, may well not be economically feasible, and will cost taxpayers billions and billions of dollars.

Several of these projects have price guarantees that are staggering, that are astounding when you consider what the normal price of energy is today. I will mention a couple, Mr. President, to familiarize my colleagues with the cost of some of the projects that are pending. The Dow Syngas project is one of the projects that now has awarded contracts. This is one that is already in line and has a guaranteed price of initially $12.50 per million Btu's; then at a later time, after a certain amount of production, $11 per million Btu's. Mr. President, the market price for gas right now is right around $3. So you see, this is a price guarantee that is over four times what the market price is for maximum cost or price guarantees of $620 million.

The Cathedral Bluffs project has a maximum synthetic fuels obligation of $2.19 billion and has a guaranteed price of $60 per barrel. Mr. President, on the spot market today, oil is selling for about $28. The duration of the price guarantee is for 10 years. Companies participate, such as Occidental Oil Co. They have a presence in my State as well as Tenneco. Those are big oil companies. Mr. President, the Great Plains Coal Gasification Project, another project that is a DOE project that was transferred under Synfuels, has a maximum price guarantee of $790 million. The guaranteed price is $10 per million per Btu.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. You mentioned the Great Plains coal gasification plant. That was constructed under a loan guarantee program. From the time that was built, of course, the anticipated cost of energy has gone down sharply. The people who participate in that plant have a choice. They can shut it down, in which case the Federal Government, the taxpayers of this country, Mr. President, are obligated for $1.8 million. If it is shifted over to a price guarantee where they make up the difference between the present price, which is lower than they anticipated of what they get for production, the cost to the Government—I think the chairman of the committee just pointed out, Mr. President—is in the neighborhood of $500 million for 10 years. That is a bargain—$500 million versus $1.8 billion. It is still a subsidy, I might point out, but the plant has been constructed. It would be my hope, Mr. President, that when we do things in the future in Synfuels, we do them with price guarantees and let them bid in so much per barrel equivalent of energy production. I think in a sense that is what my colleague, the Senator from Oklahoma, is making as a point. He does make some sense. But in the case of the plant which he was illustrating, to continue and switch over to a price guarantee actually saves us almost two-thirds of the exposure that the Federal Government has, the way it stands under the present loan guarantee. I just wanted to make that clear.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the Senator's comments. Again, we are talking about lots of money and how these contracts are written. We are talking about substantial amounts of money, and substantial prices for energy. Here again when you talk about billions, sometimes Congressmen, Senators, and consumers lose the impact. But when you start telling them that you are talking about $60 per barrel, or $70 per barrel, or $10 for gas when gas sells for $3, I think maybe it helps bring the project home.

The Northern Peat Energy Project, which is in Maine, has a letter of intent that is executed. The amount of loan guarantee in this case is $160 million. The guaranteed price again is $10.50 per million Btu. The price guarantee period is for 10 years. That means taxpayers are going to be guaranteeing that price for 10 years, again a price that presently is three or four times the market price for natural gas.

The Union Oil Parachute Creek Program, phase No. 2.

Mr. President, most people or those who have worked in this are aware that we have already a Union phase 1, and the amount of Federal liability in this case goes up to $400 million. Union phase 2, if it is enacted, has total liability of $2.7 billion. The price guarantee called for in Union phase 2 is a price of $60 per barrel which can be increased up to $67 per barrel should Union successfully utilize its seed technology. These prices are tied to an escalator. So again we are looking at the Federal Government guaranteeing these prices, $60-some per barrel, escalating and increasing when the cost of oil today produced in the market, domestically or imported, is around $28 to $30.

The Seek Ridge Project in Utah has an authorized letter of intent. The terms of the price guarantee would run for 10 years with a guaranteed price of $42.50 per barrel, again 1983 prices escalating with the producers price index. Seek Ridge is a smaller project, a $45 million project, and certainly with the amendment that the Senators from New Jersey and Mississippi are sponsoring, there is $4.262 billion remaining. So there would be ample funds to fund several programs.

There may not be enough funds to fund every program that every oil company or every company wishes to fund, because when you start doling out Federal dollars and giving price guarantees and loan guarantees, there are a lot of companies that like to be at the trough.

Quite frankly, our country cannot afford these billions and billions of dollars. Most people should be aware that phase 2 of the Synfuels Program if enacted will cost another $68 billion to meet some goals and objectives that certainly are not attainable but yet they are still in the law today.

I just call to the attention of my colleagues that some of these projects are enormously expensive. I hope that we can go into some development. I hope that we can go in and convert shale oil to oil, or that we can convert coal to gas. We have some projects already in line to test that technology.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. Is it true that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation guaranteed the price for a barrel of oil produced for synthetic fuels as high as $92 per barrel?

I have a Washington Post article, dated July 24, 1984, which I would like to submit for the RECORD.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SYNFUELS GUARANTEE PUT AT $92 A BARREL

(By Michael Isikoff)

The Union Oil Co. would be guaranteed a $92-per-barrel price of oil for a massive oil shale project it is building in Colorado under a contract tentatively approved by the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp., according to a new federal study.

The $92 per barrel price is about three times the current market price for oil and nearly twice the $48 per barrel market price that the agency projects for 1989, when the huge plant in Parachute, Colo., is scheduled to begin production of oil from shale.

The General Accounting Office, in a new study to be released today, says that the Synthetic Fuels Corp. initially could be required to make payments to Union of up to $44 per barrel on each of the 42.152 barrels of oil produced at the plant.

Rep. Michael Synar (D-Okla.), chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on the environment, said yesterday that this would result in payments to Union of nearly $1 million per day over a six-year period between 1989 and 1995. The agency previously has announced that it would provide up to $2.7 billion in price guarantees for the project.

Decrying the synthetic fuels tentative contracts as "corporate welfare," Synar said, "It is inconceivable that, while we are holding the line on lunches for schoolchildren, assistance to the needy and health care for the elderly, we are guaranteeing Union Oil Co. federal handouts of roughly $1 million a day."

Karen Hutchison, spokeswoman for the synthetic fuels agency, said yesterday that the tentative contract with Union reflects the agency's "whole philosophy" of encouraging corporate investment in synthetic fuels by guaranteeing to cover the huge start-up costs plus a reasonable profit in the initial years in the expectation that the plants will become economically viable later.

She also noted that the Union Oil contract includes a profit sharing plan that could be enough to recoup the government's entire $2.7 billion investment in the plant over its 15-year life. "Sure, we're paying out a lot," said Hutchison. But you're talking about unlocking a resource that has enormous energy potential for the country."

But the GAO report notes a number of aspects of the Union Oil project that raise questions about the agency's program, according to Synar. The report says that, on top of the subsidies, Union Oil could receive as much as $3.4 billion in tax breaks for building the project. It also says the plant uses technology similar to that of another federally subsidized project at the Parachute site, known as Union Oil Phase I.

That plant was completed last fall, but there have been "about 20 unsuccessful attempts to operate the plant," the GAO said. A Union Oil spokesman acknowledged that there have been some "start-up" difficulties with the project, but said they did not indicate "any fundamental problems." He added, however, that he could not estimate when Union Phase I will begin full production.

Synfuels opponents are expected to use the GAO report this week when they attempt to knock about $10 billion out of the agency's budget during House debate on an Interior appropriations bill. The Synthetic Fuels Corp. is currently unable to spend any more money because it does not have enough board members for a quorum, and the Reagan administration has refused to nominate any more board members until major cuts in its budget are enacted by Congress.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NICKLES. I will be happy to yield the floor. I just wanted to make a few comments and allow Senators to consider the various proposals we have. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma for his comments on this outrageous boondoggling program. We are now trying to cut $9 billion out of this program and we have people defending it as if it was medicare, $9 billion. I look around the floor and see the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the distinguished Senator from Idaho, and the distinguished Senator from Virginia in the chair. I can assure the Senate that if this amendment is not adopted, we will come back and revisit this with maybe $8 billion or $7 billion, until we get to the level which the distinguished chairman said he can absorb, which is $5 billion. We have a $200 billion budget deficit out there. It does not make sense to take the dollars from the taxpayers and send them to companies to guarantee $67 a barrel oil. It does not make any sense at all.

The Interior appropriations bill is before us and this amendment is before us. We will have a chance to vote on this amendment tomorrow but the Interior appropriations bill will be before us for a period longer.

I know the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma feels as I do, that to spend this kind of money is absolutely outrageous at this time. I know that each of our statements has clearly made that point.

In the article in the Washington Post which I submitted for the RECORD it clearly shows that of these subsidies of $13 billion, $4.9 billion in subsidies go to the promotion and development of the Union oil shale technology.

The Union oil shale technology is about $67 a barrel oil.

Mr. President, this just does not make sense. I hope the Senate will see its way clear to reducing it by a larger margin than the $5 billion that is before the Senate at this time.

Mr. McCLURE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I think perhaps we are about at the point where it would be useful to set aside the pending matter. I will do that in just a moment. I will ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending matter so that we may consider an amendment to be offered by Senator TSONGAS, who I understand cannot be here tomorrow. I wish to accommodate him on an amendment that we are prepared to accept.

Before doing that, however, let me respond to just three points which have been made.

First, is the administration in support of the Bradley-Nickles amendment or in support of the committee amendment? I can say unequivocally, by the letter that was entered into the RECORD in the Appropriations Committee yesterday, that the administration is in support of the compromise which is now in the pending committee bill, not the pending Bradley-Nickles amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCLURE. Yes.

Mr. NICKLES. Was that the letter by Mr. Stockman dated September 25?

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. Am I also correct, if you read the first line in the last paragraph, it says:

We remain convinced that the President's original proposal would leave in place a strong synthetic fuels program and represents sound policy.

Mr. McCLURE. Let me answer this way: I consulted with OMB on every sentence in that letter. I know what every sentence in that letter means and what it does not mean. I think a fair way to characterize it is that the administration is saying in that letter that while they still would have preferred to go the other way, that in order to resolve the controversy they have accepted the compromise as the best alternative.

What Mr. Stockman, the Director of OMB, is saying, in effect, is that, Yes, we have not abandoned our original position. That is what we would have preferred to do. However, in view of all of the circumstances and all of the debate and all of the discussion that has come up since that time, we are willing to accept a compromise as the best achievable measure at this time.

That is the administration's position in support of the compromise. I recommend that Senators look at the first paragraph on page 2, which very clearly states that fact.

The second thing that I wish to address myself to is a comment made earlier that somehow the Bradley-Nickles amendment is even the administration's first position. It is not because the Bradley-Nickles amendment is a $9 billion rescission, and the administration's first proposal was a total $9 billion rescission. Including the $2 billion that was rescinded earlier, we would need a $7 billion rescission at this time to meet the administration's original proposal.

The Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Oklahoma would add $9 billion to the $2 billion making a total of $11 billion, which is $2 billion more than even the administration asked.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCLURE. Please let me make one other point.

The Senator a moment ago made reference to the Tosco proposal which failed, and whether or not that money was still available and whether or not there was still the $2 billion.

Let the record be clear. The Comptroller General said that the Tosco money was still available for obligation and/or expenditure by the Corporation. It was following that that the $2 billion was rescinded. That is real rescission. That is not funny money. I think the record should be unambiguous and clear that that $2 billion rescission was a $2 billion rescission. We should not get confused by talking about whether or not the Tosco money was there or not. It was there.

Now, I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Oklahoma if he has a question that I can respond to.

Mr. NICKLES. I shall be happy to. With regard to the Tosco money, on what date did we pass the $2 billion rescission? Does the Senator remember when we passed the $2 billion rescission?

Mr. McCLURE. I have forgotten the exact date. Let me ask what it is the Senator is trying to get at so that I can make my answer clear.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, what I am trying to get at is there was a difference of opinion between GAO and Treasury whether or not that $1.155 billion for Tosco could be reobligated by Synfuels or whether the Treasury no longer had to make good on those promises.

Mr. McCLURE. The Secretary of the Treasury never agreed with the Comptroller. He could have tried to block it, perhaps, or he could have taken action to remove the money and go to jail. I guess that is what the Secretary of the Treasury might have done, but he did not.

Mr. NICKLES. The point I am trying to make is there was some dispute over whether or not that money could be reobligated and whether or not the actual impact of it was the Tosco project was canceled, therefore freeing up this $1.155 billion. So they got some money back that they thought they had obligated and so the net effect of the rescission was about $850 million.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator can argue if he wishes to that if Tosco had not been available, we would have not rescinded the $2 billion. I cannot answer what Congress might have done if Tosco money had not been available, but the Comptroller General had ruled that the money was available for expenditure. That was merged into the discussion and the decision by Congress at the time the $2 billion was rescinded. So Congress had spoken on that question and did speak very clearly on that question at that time. It was not offset against Tosco. That money was there.

I will admit that the Secretary of the Treasury did not agree with the Comptroller General, but the Secretary of the Treasury is not the final authority in that particular instance; the Comptroller General is.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an additional question?

Mr. McCLURE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. NICKLES. On the administration question, when the House of Representatives took up this bill and there were basically two debates, should we rescind $5 billion or should we rescind $10 billion, am I not correct in saying that the administration was supporting a rescission of $10 billion?

Mr. McCLURE. I cannot respond to that, Mr. President, because my only knowledge of the administration's position at that time was expressed in the request for the $9 billion rescission, of which the original rescission of $2 billion was a part. I cannot tell the Senator how it was playing with respect to certain arguments that may have occurred in the other body. I simply cannot relate to that.

Mr. NICKLES. It is my recollection that those were the two amendments that were being debated on the House side, and the administration was supporting the rescission of $10 billion.

Mr. McCLURE. Without quibbling over the figures, I believe that the administration may have, at the time of the debate in the House, supported a larger rescission than they now support. The Senator is correct in that regard.

As I stated earlier, however, in view of all the conversations and the exceptions and the agreements in the balancing of this compromise, the administration has said that they support the compromise at this time.

Mr. NICKLES. I compliment my distinguished friend, the fine Senator from Idaho, because he has negotiated—and certainly, anyone who reads the letter from the President knows he did support the $9 billion rescission—the Senator from Idaho has negotiated at length and maybe has convinced OMB that some concessions are in order to get some rescission. If we do not pass some rescission, they do not get anything, is that correct?

Am I not correct in saying that Congress needs to take affirmative action to rescind some money that was already authorized?

Mr. McCLURE. The administration has said, as the Senator stated, in a letter to which he made reference—I think he made a copy of that letter a part of the RECORD—that in view of all of the circumstances, all the concessions and the balances that are available, we will, if this amendment is adopted and this compromise agreed to by the Congress, go forward with this program. They have not said what would happen if the Congress fails to do this, because certainly, then, they have to look at how they salvage things like the Great Plains project, the various letters-of-intent projects, and the various other ones that are in various stages of completion. The administration would have a very hard choice to make as to how they go about getting a Board in place to make decisions to carry out whatever affirmative agreements or decisions they made at that time. But they have stated that if this compromise is adopted in final action by the Congress which can be signed by the President of the United States, they will go forward with this program as outlined.

Mr. NICKLES. It would be better to get half a loaf than no loaf at all.

May I ask the Senator a couple more questions?

Under the Bradley-Nickles proposal, there would be $4.6 billion available for contracts that have letters of intent pending for other commitments, for new contracts, unsigned letters of intent. Under the Senator's proposal, how much money would be available? I think he mentioned it earlier. I wanted to find out again.

Under the Senator's proposal, how much money would be available?

Mr. McCLURE. For the letters-of-intent programs, $5.7 billion; of unobligated, a little less than $2.5 billion.

Mr. NICKLES. And for that $2.5 billion, are there projects lined up? In other words, there is no letter of intent, there is no obligation by Synfuels Corporation or anything to fund a project. Are there other projects that maybe we should be aware of?

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, let us go back to the original Energy Security Act which set up the Corporation. We required at that time that a program be developed which would demonstrate a range of technologies, and have a diversity of media and geographic diversity. Looking at the program as it has developed to this point, most observers believe that the area that is not covered, either in technology or media to be applied or the geographic diversity, would be Eastern or Appalachian coal.

The Corporation has before it now some 18 proposals that total $17 billion competing for the approval of the Corporation for the commitment of the remaining $2.5 billion.

Mr. NICKLES. So the Senator was indicating that maybe something needs to be done in the East in Appalachian coal. In other words, we could fund every letter of intent that has already been signed—and my records indicate that that is about $6 billion—

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, may I make just one clarification in that regard, because the $5.7 billion that is earmarked for the letters-of-intent projects—that is all of those that were identified in the April meeting of the board—those total outside obligations could be as much as $6.8 billion. Of that, $5.7 billion is earmarked for those programs.

Mr. NICKLES. So if you add up all the signed letters of intent, Mr. President, that is $6.7 billion, the unsigned letters of intent are another $700 million. So you come up with your $6.8 billion. So you could fund every single one of those projects, even though the only commitment that the Federal Government maybe has given is a letter of intent, and we would still have $2.5 billion that we could come up with an Appalachian coal project or some other type of different technology or different geographical area?

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator is correct, but let me add this much: That every one of the proposals must meet the statutory criteria, and must meet all the criteria laid down by the Corporation before they could even go to contract. They must also have the affirmative approval at each stage of a majority vote of a quorum of the Board of Directors.

Mr. NICKLES. When and if they are able to get a quorum.

Mr. McCLURE. When and if.

Mr. NICKLES. Assuming this new project may be coming up with technology that would cost us just like all those other—I mentioned every one of the major projects that has a signed letter of intent, and every one is looking at $60 oil, or I think I mentioned $48 oil, or $10 gas, or $15 gas, so they are very expensive projects, concerning Btu. Then there would be $2.5 billion for that—

Mr. McCLURE. Let me correct one part of that statement lest there be any misapprehension.

These projects have a variety of financial arrangements merged into the proposals and approved in the contract with the Board. You have to look at the totality of the expenditures under the contract and the stream of revenues that might come back to calculate what the total cost would be. I think what the Senator has outlined is what the maximum cost might be but does not necessarily mean what the total cost would be under a given proposal because there are some contingencies involved.

Mr. NICKLES. Contingencies concerning the maximum liability, not contingencies concerning the price guarantee. If the market price exceeded the guaranteed price, there would be no cost.

Mr. McCLURE. It would depend on the individual contract as to what that might be. It also depends upon what your assumption of future prices will be in the energy field, because you cannot compare the cost of product guarantee to today's market. You have to compare it to the market at the time the product is actually marketed.

Mr. NICKLES. Does the Senator not think that the private sector would be better, using their dollars, at making the guesstimates on what the price of energy would be 10 years from now than the Government guaranteeing what they guess the price will be?

Mr. McCLURE. Certainly it does not determine what the product price in the market will be at that given date. Those are matters of conjecture and estimate. I say to my friend from Oklahoma—and he knows better than I—it was about 3 years ago everybody in the industry was confident of predicting $90-a-barrel oil by the end of this century. Now, the estimates today are somewhat different than that, and that is why we have some financial distress among financial institutions and producer organizations in the energy field.

Mr. NICKLES. I understand. One final question. In the Senator's proposal, he mentioned a $5.2 billion rescission. I did not hear any comments concerning the $750 million for coal R&D, so we are going to rescind some money but we are also going to set aside some money for coal R&D?

Mr. McCLURE. Part of the compromise proposal is that of the $5.2 billion to be rescinded, $750 million would be put into a clean coal R&D reserve, subject to appropriations by the Congress in the future. So that that money would be available for that kind of research and development but subject to whatever action the Congress takes in the future. It is tied rather specifically but not exclusively to the project purposes in section 320 of this bill.

Mr. NICKLES. The money would have to be appropriated, is that what the Senator is saying?

Mr. McCLURE. The money would have to be appropriated.

Mr. NICKLES. The $750 million. I am looking at Mr. Stockman's letter that we have talked about, and to quote the second paragraph on page 2, he says:

> We continue to have concerns about the need for the $750 million reserve.

So there must be some reservations on the compromise that the Senator has worked out.

Mr. McCLURE. I am certain they will make recommendations as to what kind of research and development programs ought to be funded from this reserve account. The authorizing and appropriating committees will exercise judgment with respect to those, and that judgment may vary from year to year. I do not know that I or anyone else can predict what a future Congress might do. But it is plain that the money is placed into this reserve account to be available for those purposes when, as, and if the Congress appropriates the money for those purposes.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the Senator's comments. Just one final thought on that section. In doing a little research, we find that in coal liquefaction, synthetic fuels R&D, from 1980 to 1984 Congress appropriated $711 million, and that in surface coal gasification, Congress appropriated, from 1980 to 1984, $409 million. So there has already been a substantial Federal contribution in coal R&D. I think the Senator has answered my question.

Mr. McCLURE. I think it would be fair to note for the record that those are the initial actions taken, but a lot of this money was rescinded later. But the comment that a great deal of money has been appropriated to those areas simply underscores the commitment of the Congress to find ways to use its energy resource in an environmentally acceptable way. I think that commitment on the part of the Congress is a continuing commitment. I think it will continue into the future. But that is conjecture on my part. Remember that we are the OPEC of coal. We have more coal reserves than almost anyone else in the world, and abundant oil shale as well. The way in which we develop the technologies to make it available to the consumers of this country has a tremendous impact upon the security and the economic viability and competitive position of this Nation in the future. Having those resources available to us is certainly a great asset to our country in terms of our security and our economic strength. Making it available, however, depends upon the development of technologies. That is the reason we have put both research and development money in the regular appropriations act and the reason why the Congress in the past created the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and the demonstration program for this kind of technology.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, an independent energy supply does enhance national security. So does a healthy economy. I believe we can further both of these vital goals if we rescind $9 billion of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's budget and turn our attention and resources toward other energy technologies that promise less waste and greater results.

In 1980, long gasoline lines, rising energy prices, and increasing energy consumption spawned the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I opposed the SFC then, because I have always believed that the commercialization of new technologies is more appropriately and effectively accomplished by private industry, not the Government. I still think the SFC is based on bad philosophy. Today, however, it is clear that the Corporation is also based on bad assumptions. Energy prices are no longer escalating, and consumption is no longer on the rise.

The SFC promised to replace expensive imported oil with domestically produced fuel at competitive prices. Yet synfuels now being produced cost two to three times more than oil. The industry's yield will be little more than one-tenth of what was promised in 1980. In fact, under the most optimistic projections, synfuels production will be 200,000 barrels a day by 1988. This is hardly energy independence. In fact, it is less than 2 percent of our current oil consumption; $15 billion is a high price for the taxpayer to pay for such a small energy return.

There has been yet another change since the SFC was first considered. Our deficit has more than tripled since that time. Surely we have the courage to reassess the SFC in the light of today's vastly different realities. What we have today is a corporation lacking in a proven product, beset by management difficulties, and costing the American taxpayer far more than it can deliver. The responsible action for us to take is a reduction of the synfuels budget—and a meaningful one. By accepting the Bradley proposal to rescind $9 billion, we can ensure that the Government's efforts are concentrated on small research and development projects. When the technologies and the market are ready, we may well find private industry willing to take the risk on its own.

AMENDMENT NO. 4850

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I now send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE] proposes an amendment numbered 4850.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment to the pending committee amendment. At the end of the committee amendment insert—

"It is the sense of the Congress that the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation should proceed expeditiously to complete action on the comprehensive strategy required by the Energy Security Act and otherwise implement promptly the national synthetic fuels program of Title I of the Energy Security Act."

AMENDMENT NO. 4851

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE] proposes an amendment numbered 4851.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

First degree amendment to House provision, page 62, line 22, after the period, insert "It is the sense of the Congress that the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation should proceed expeditiously to complete action on the comprehensive strategy required by the Energy Security Act.".

AMENDMENT NO. 4852

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 4852.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Second degree amendment to first degree amendment to House provision, page 62, line 22.

Strike the period and insert in lieu thereof, "and otherwise promptly implement the National Synthetic Fuels Program of Title I of the Energy Security Act."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, we do have Members in the Senate who are involved in a Jewish holiday. We would like very much to wind this down to accommodate those Members. I know there are other Senators on their feet, but I would urge that we, as soon as possible, be permitted to get to the normal evening wrapup.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator from Alaska yield?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. McCLURE. I had indicated earlier that it was my hope, after a brief response, we would be able to temporarily set this matter aside so that we could consider an amendment to be offered by Senator TSONGAS which we are prepared to accept.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be temporarily set aside in order that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] may offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4853

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] proposes an amendment numbered 4853.

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 14, Line 20, strike the number "$98,908,000" and insert the following: "$111,783,000, of which $1,500,000 is available to carry out the provisions of Section 303 and 304 of P.L. 95-290".

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering today would provide funds for construction and development of the Lowell National Historic Park of the Lowell Preservation Commission. This was a park set up a number of years ago but has been inadequately funded in terms of development. This amendment corresponds exactly to an amendment that has passed on the House side, and I believe that the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the full committee will acquiesce to the amendment.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts is correct in stating that this matter has always been supported by Congress. As a matter of practice, we have withheld this appropriation in the Senate in the past. The House has had it in their bill. We have gone to conference and agreed to it in conference.

I think it is entirely appropriate that the Senator who has offered the amendment this evening, having been the original author of the statute by which this area was created, should be given the opportunity, in this, his last year in the Senate, to have the amendment offered and the money added in the Senate. I am happy to accede to the request. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. TSONGAS. I appreciate the statement by the Senator from Idaho.

I also have been asked to state that the chairman of the committee, Senator HATFIELD, strongly supports the amendment and wishes to be quoted in that regard.

Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies for his support of the Lowell National Park. There is an additional aspect of park funding that I would like to discuss.

The Lowell National Park has substantially expanded responsibilities under the program as it presently exists. Specifically, there is a need for an additional $108,000 in operating funds for the park staff to provide interpretation, maintenance, and utilities for the new Suffolk Mill turbine exhibit. This exhibit will be completed in fiscal year 1985 and serves as the central location for water power displays which is a main theme of the park.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it is the intention of the committee to address this issue in our conference with the House on the Interior appropriations bill. I expect that we will be able to provide an appropriate level of funding to meet the needs of the Lowell National Historical Park operations budget, and I am pleased to support the Senator's efforts on behalf of this successful model for urban heritage parks.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am also aware of the great success of the Lowell National Historic Park and appreciate the enormous personal commitment to the project exhibited by my colleague from Massachusetts. Clearly, the national historic treasures of our New England States serve a national constituency and are worthy of Federal financial support. I am pleased to join my distinguished subcommittee chairman in this effort.

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman and the subcommittee chairman for their support on this matter.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I cannot escape the opportunity at this time to thank the Senator personally as well as publicly for having been so cooperative in this matter in the past. I am happy to be able to extend that cooperation this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4853) was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TSONGAS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending matters be set aside and that an amendment by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. TRIBLE] may be in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4854

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. TRIBLE], I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. McCLURE], for Mr. TRIBLE, proposes an amendment numbered 4854:

On page 9, line 20, strike "305,983,000" and insert in lieu thereof "306,383,000"

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, my amendment adds $400,000 to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service budget for fiscal year 1985 to provide startup money for the new Cape Charles National Wildlife Refuge at the tip end of the Eastern Shore of Virginia.

The nucleus of the new refuge is the former Cape Charles Air Force Base, which was a radar tracking base until its deactivation about 5 years ago. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has been working on acquisition of the base for about 3 years through General Services Administration surplus property disposal procedures, but had not anticipated the actual transfer until 1985. Because of the unexpected speed of the transfer, the Cape Charles Refuge was not included in the service's budget request for fiscal year 1985.

I visited Cape Charles last month to attend the transfer ceremony, and can attest that it is a beautiful tract of land on the Eastern Shore of Virginia. Primarily tidal marshland, it includes some upland areas in both timber and field crops.

The Fish and Wildlife Service has been presented with a rare opportunity. This area is among the most important habitat on the east coast for migratory waterfowl, raptors, and songbirds, and is home to endangered and threatened species such as the peregrine falcon, bald eagle, brown pelican, and five species of marine turtle. In addition, the Delmarva Peninsula is a primary flight corridor during the annual southern migration. The peninsula narrows in the south, creating a funneling effect on the birds which culminates at Cape Charles. Because of the variety of habitat, the area provides excellent cover and forage for the large variety and high concentration of migratory species.

In addition to the excellent wildfowl habitat, the former Air Force Base has a variety of buildings in relatively good condition. These can be converted to refuge use. The Fish and Wildlife Service is also examining the possibility of establishing a national training center for Service personnel and a refuge law enforcement refresher cause training center utilizing some of the existing buildings. Colleges and universities have indicated interest in using the facilities for environmental studies under contract or cooperative use agreements with Fish and Wildlife.

My amendment permits the Fish and Wildlife Service to maintain these new properties and existing facilities and plan the future uses of the area. I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4854) was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that moton on the table.

S. 3025. A bill to amend sections 15, 19, and 20 of the act of March 3, 1899 (33 U.S.C. 409, 414, and 415), to authorize recovery by the United States of costs incurred in removal of wrecks from navigable waters; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

RECOVERY OF COSTS BY THE UNITED STATES IN REMOVING WRECKS FROM NAVIAGABLE WATERS

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, earlier this month, the administration submitted to Congress proposed legislation to authorize the recovery by the United States of costs incurred when removing wrecks from navigable waters.

I am pleased to submit that bill, by request, and I request unanimous consent that a copy of the bill, as well as the transmittal letter, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3025

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 15 of the Act of March 3, 1899 (33 U.S.C. 409) is amended as follows:

(1) by deleting the words "voluntary or carelessly";

(2) by deleting the words "accidentally or otherwise,"; and

(3) by inserting the words ", lessee, or operator" immediately after the word "owner" in each place where it appears.

Sec. 2. Sections 19 and 20 of the Act of March 3, 1899 (33 U.S.C. 414 and 415) are amended by inserting the word "(a)" in front of the first word of each section and adding the following new subsection at the end of each section:

"(b) the owner, lessee, or operator of such vessel, boat, watercraft, raft, or other obstruction as described in this section shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the cost of removal or destruction and disposal as described which exceeds the costs recovered under subsection (a). Any amount recovered from the owner, lessee, or operator of such vessel pursuant to this subsection to recover costs in excess of the proceeds from the sale or disposition of said vessel shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington, DC, September 10, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is a draft of legislation "To amend sections 15, 19 and 20 of the Act of March 3, 1899 (33 U.S.C. 409, 414 and 415) to authorize recovery by the United States of costs incurred in removal of wrecks from navigable waters."

This proposal is part of the Department of the Army Civil Works legislative program for the 98th Congress. The Office of Management and Budget advises that, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the presentation of the proposal for the consideration of Congress. The Department of the Army recommends that Congress enact the proposed legislation.

PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

The proposed legislation would amend the Act of March 3, 1899 to allow the Federal Government to recover costs incurred in removing wrecks from navigable waters. If a wrecked vessel has a significant salvage value, the owner will generally salvage it. In cases where salvage of a vessel is uneconomical, the owner will usually abandon it. Existing authorities allow the Secretary of Army to remove wrecks from navigable waters if the owner does not do so. The Secretary is authorized to dispose of the vessel and to deposit the proceeds from the sale into the Treasury. However, in most cases where the owner does not remove the wreck, the receipts from the salvage are less than the cost incurred by the Federal Government in removal. The proposed legislation would require the owner, lessee, or operator of any wrecked vessel to repay to the United States the cost incurred in removal of the obstruction from navigable channels.

COST AND BUDGET DATA

The enactment of this proposal will decrease the budgetary requirements of the Department of the Army Civil Works program, although we are unable to estimate the extent to which we will be able to realize such reductions.

ENVIRONMENTAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS IMPACT CONSIDERATIONS

This proposal has no environmental or civil rights impact.

Sincerely,

ROBERT K. DAWSON,
Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works).●

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. CRANSTON, and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 3028. A bill to establish Federal matching grants to encourage State trust funds or appropriations for child abuse and neglect prevention activities; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT PREVENTION FEDERAL CHALLENGE GRANTS ACT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would provide Federal challenge grants for States establishing significant funds to support child abuse and neglect prevention activities. I am pleased to have Senators HAWKINS, CRANSTON, and SPECTER join me in sponsoring the Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention Federal Challenge Grants Act.

Millions of children in this country are growing up at risk of abuse and neglect. From Maine to California, child abuse has reached epidemic proportions. Between 1976 and 1982, for example, reports of child abuse and neglect across the country soared by 123 percent. In my State of Connecticut, three times as many children died as a result of physical abuse in 1982 than in 1980. In other States, such tragic statistics are even higher.

As cochairman of the Senate children's caucus, I can verify that reported cases of child sexual abuse are also increasing at very alarming rates. This past April, the caucus heard from expert witnesses on childhood sexual victimization. We were told that reported cases of child sexual abuse in the State of Maine jumped over 100 percent in 1 year alone. And, we heard the compelling stories of the children involved in the recent tragic events in Los Angeles.

The Senate will act tomorrow to restore critical funds to the Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention and Treatment Act of 1978. I have been a principal sponsor of efforts to restore this funding. However, given the greatly increased demand for crisis intervention in child abuse cases, Federal funds distributed to States under the 1978 act are most often used for treatment. Little funding is left for prevention efforts.

Starting in 1980, some States began to recognize the need to focus directly on widespread community-based prevention efforts. To date, 20 States have set up special trust funds for child abuse prevention activities. These funds are generated in a variety of ways, including surcharges on marriage licenses, divorce actions, and birth certificates or by special checkoffs on income tax returns. Other States have set up significant funds for child abuse prevention activities through direct appropriations.

The kinds of community prevention programs supported by these special funding mechanisms range from classes on parenting and coping with family stress to sexual abuse prevention training for children. As I learned from the five children who testified before the children's caucus last April, plays and puppet shows can be extremely effective in teaching youngsters that if someone uses "bad touches" on them, they should tell a parent, a teacher, or a friend. Children who are not taught about the risks of sexual abuse at school will be more likely to learn about it first from an offender.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would challenge all States to establish significant funds supporting child abuse prevention projects. For every $3 that States make available for child abuse and neglect prevention activities, the Federal Government will provide $1 in matching funds. These 25-percent Federal challenge grants would be available to the States for the next 5 years. Such grants will encourage those States who have not yet acted to establish trust funds or other funding mechanisms. It will also encourage States that have already acted to increase the amount of their special funds. By 1990, States should be well on the way to generating enough money to support significant child abuse prevention efforts throughout their communities.

At no time will a Federal challenge grant to any State exceed an amount equal to 50 cents times the number of children residing in that State. Mr. President, if this Nation cannot afford to spend 50 cents a child over the next 5 years to prevent possible abuse or neglect, then our priorities are sorely misplaced.

The truth is that prevention is the most effective method we have of combating child abuse. We know just how serious the long-term repercussions of child abuse can be. Witnesses at the April children's caucus hearing emphasized that close to three-quarters of all runaways have been the victims of abuse, often sexual abuse. Prior sexual victimization is also closely linked to teenage prostitution. Research has shown that two-thirds or more of all juvenile offenders have had histories of physical or sexual victimization. And, adult survivors will verify that the effects of such victimization can include alcohol and drug abuse, severe depression, and an inability to form close relationships.

Mr. President, the time to encourage the States to wage all-out child abuse prevention campaigns is now. I urge my colleagues to join me in sponsoring the Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention Federal Challenge Grants Act.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3028

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention Federal Challenge Grants Act".

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) disturbing increases have occurred in recent years in the numbers of younger Americans who are abused;

(2) many children who run away from home, who fall prey to pornography and prostitution, who suffer from a dependency on alcohol and drugs, and who become juvenile offenders, have been victims of child abuse;

(3) research has shown that abuse tends to repeat itself, and many times parents who abuse their children were once victims themselves;

(4) given the increased demand for treatment and crisis intervention in child abuse and neglect cases, Federal funds distributed to States are most often used for treatment and little is left or prevention efforts;

(5) since 1980 some States have begun to recognize the critical need for prevention efforts, and trust funds (generated by surcharges on marriage licenses, birth certificates or divorce actions, or by special checkoffs on income tax returns) are being established to allow such States to pay for child abuse and neglect prevention activities despite depressed State economies and budget cutbacks;

(6) in recognition of the increased cases of child abuse and neglect, other States have established significant funds for child abuse and neglect prevention activities through direct appropriations; and

(7) the Nation cannot afford to ignore the importance of preventing child abuse.

(b) It is the purpose of this Act, by providing for Federal challenge grants, to encourage States to establish and maintain trust funds or other funding mechanisms, including appropriations to support child abuse and neglect prevention activities.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act—

(c) There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act for the fiscal year 1985 and for each of the four succeeding fiscal years.

STATE ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 5. Any State is eligible for a grant under this Act for any fiscal year if such State has established or maintained in the previous fiscal year a trust fund or other funding mechanism, including appropriations, which is available only for child abuse and neglect prevention activities, including activities which—

REPORT

SEC. 9. The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Congress at the end of each year a compilation and analysis of any reports submitted by eligible States under section 6(b)(1)(C).

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I wish to join Senator DODD in sponsoring this legislation to provide Federal challenge grants to States to encourage them to provide funding for programs to treat and prevent sexual child abuse.

Last April, I joined Senators DODD, CHAFEE, and SPECTER at a Senate Children's Caucus policy forum that was held in conjunction with the Third Annual Conference on the Sexual Exploitation of Children. This conference, sponsored by the National Children's Hospital in the District of Columbia, served to bring together experts and individuals involved in the treatment and prevention of child abuse, especially sexual child abuse. Although these experts may differ on the types of approaches to combating this heinous crime, they all agree that educating children about sexual child abuse is a vital component of any prevention effort.

Our first panel was composed of children, not children who have been abused, but children who have viewed or participated in programs designed to teach them about inappropriate sexual touching and the fact that they have the right to say no to any touching that makes them uncomfortable. Fortunately, a variety of different programs and teaching tools have been developed by individuals and organizations dedicated to preventing further abuse. They include theatrical presentations such as "Touch," by the Illusion theater of Minneapolis, video presentations like "It's OK to say No!," by the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault, "Cat and Mouse: A self protection program for children," by the Girls Club of Omaha, NE; "Once I was a Little Bit Frightened," an illustrated booklet for children intended to help children talk about possible sexual child abuse.

Unfortunately, many of these excellent programs and teaching guides are not being utilized because of lack of financial resources to take advantage of these prevention programs. One of my former staff members, Connie Winter is now working in behalf of CAP, the Child Assault Prevention Project headquartered in Columbus, OH. She wrote to me that:

While I appreciated working on the Labor & Human Resources Committee, I am now enjoying working in a grass roots organization. There is so much more contact with people and with those who are victims of sexual assault. I clearly remember people constantly asking for federal funds while at the Committee and now I realize how they felt. In the past sexual assault has not been a popular topic and was deluged with myths. Fortunately, this subject has been getting more media coverage, although we realize it is an uphill battle.

Mr. President, it is a national shame how little money is allocated to programs like CAP. Programs that are designed to prevent the abuse of our Nation's children. I feel that the Federal Government has a responsibility to provide Federal funds for this purpose.

This legislation is a very modest proposal. It provides Federal funds to match funding appropriated at the State level for child abuse prevention and education efforts. My own State of Florida, is considering expanding its intensive crisis counseling program, its parent education training services and implementing a $2 million health instruction program which will emphasize mental health, drug and alcohol abuse and child abuse and neglect. But it is difficult to allocate funds for prevention programs, when the immediate need to care for and treat these abused children and imprison child abusers is also growing. I strongly believe that the Federal Government should demonstrate its interest in these prevention programs by providing financial encouragement to States who have shown their commitment to funding child abuse prevention programs through trust funds or other funding mechanisms.

The National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse has compiled an excellent summary of the child sexual abuse prevention resources that are currently available. The bibliography, "Prevention Focus," was submitted by one of the witnesses at our children's caucus forum, Bill Beyers, the Youth Ambassador for the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse. I ask unanimous consent that this bibliography be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mrs. HAWKINS:

S. 3029. A bill to provide for the Mary McLeod Bethune Memorial Fine Arts Center to be established by the Bethune-Cookman College in Volusia County, FL; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

MARY MC LEOD BETHUNE MEMORIAL FINE ARTS CENTER

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill that provides for the construction of a living memorial to one of our Nation's most outstanding and revered citizens. This measure directs the Secretary of Education to make the necessary funds available to construct a memorial fine arts center on the campus of Bethune-Cookman College in Volusia County, FL. This fine arts center will serve as the Nation's tribute to Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune—teacher, author, doctor, lawyer, as well as friend and adviser of Presidents.

Mr. President, Bethune-Cookman College is one of the Nation's leading historically black colleges. It was founded by Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune in 1904. Originally charted as the Daytona Normal and Industrial School for Negro Girls, Bethune-Cookman's existence provided southern black girls and women one of their first opportunities to climb up and out of servitude and toward a life of promise. The school held its first classes, under the direction of Dr. Bethune, with five young girls as students. Beginning in 1904, with $9 and fruit crates for the students to sit on, by 1907, Dr. Bethune had raised from private sources sufficient funds to erect the school's first building—Faith Hall.

Today, Bethune-Cookman College has a 60-acre campus and an enrollment of 1,200 male and female students. The college itself stands as a monument to Dr. Bethune's hard work and dedication to the ideal of educational opportunity for all. Were the establishment of this college Dr. Bethune's only accomplishment, its continued existence today might serve as an adequate memorial. Bethune-Cookman College, however, is only a small piece in the life's work of Mary McLeod Bethune.

Dr. Bethune was also a skillful leader and advocate for equality of opportunity for all Americans. On the long road toward this goal, Dr. Bethune made an extra effort to open the door to a better life for black women. As a member of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's "black cabinet," she served as head of the Division of Negro Affairs within the National Youth Administration.

The "black cabinet" served in an unofficial capacity to ensure that black Americans received a fair deal from the New Deal. As the leader of this group, Mary McLeod Bethune, with the help of her friendship with Eleanor Roosevelt, reached the inner sanctum of F.D.R.'s White House. From this vantage point, she worked to affect national policy from the top down.

Clearly, children were Dr. Bethune's special interest. She served our Nation's youth not only in F.D.R.'s administration, but she also served Presidents Coolidge and Hoover as a member of the National Commision on Child Welfare. This is one Commission, Mr. President that could very well be reconstituted today—and still have a full agenda.

There is more, much more that I could recite here today. In closing I will mention only one of Dr. Bethune's many other achievements. She was the founder of the National Council of Negro Women, the black woman's first national political voice, a voice that still calls out for an equal opportunity society. This is a society that will be achieved when all Americans realize that the most valuable resources in our society are the perserverance, integrity, and dignity of the individual.

It is in this spirit, Mr. President, that I introduce legislation to memorialize Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune. This functioning fine arts center will provide the students of Bethune-Cookman College and all the residents of Volusia County, FL, in place to pursue a greater opportunity for all our citizens.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 145—CONCERNING REDUCTION OF TARIFFS BY JAPAN

Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. PACKWOOD) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 145

Whereas, the United States and Japan are generally committed to principles of international free trade;

Whereas, in keeping with these principles, the United States has provided Japan broad access to our domestic markets;

Whereas, Japan has benefitted from this access by becoming a major United States supplier and now has a projected $31 billion annual merchandise trade surplus with the Unites States;

Whereas, Japan uses a system of prohibitively high tariffs to limit imports of American processed wood products such as plywood, particleboard, veneer, and lumber; and

Whereas, these tariffs force Japanese consumers to pay unnecessarily high prices for processed wood products, deny American wood products producers a fair opportunity to compete in Japan, reduce potential American processed wood products sales by about $500 million a year, and obstruct the development of better trade relations between the United States and Japan: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) Japan should substantially reduce the tariffs imposed by Japan on processed wood products, including plywood, particleboard, veneer, and lumber, and

(2) any refusal by Japan to substantially reduce such tariffs will seriously impede the development of better trade relations between the United States and Japan.

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, Honda Rimei, a philosopher of Japan's Tokugowa era, said that "Foreign trade is a war in which each party seeks to extract wealth from the other." America is in the middle of such a war today, and we are losing it. More and more of our wealth is shifting overseas. As evidence, this year our trade deficit is expected to reach $140 billion, signifying a loss of more than 3 million jobs.

There are many reasons for this huge trade deficit. The primary one probably is our huge budget deficit, which inflates the international value of the dollar so that imports are cheaper and exports more expensive. But another important reason is that foreign governments have outnegotiated us, using the international trade laws to their own advantage.

This has been especially true in the case of Japan. This year, Japan will sell us about $31 billion more worth of manufactured goods than we sell them. The Japanese have attained this huge surplus, in part, by successfully employing a value-added strategy, by which Japan encourages imports of raw materials and discourages imports of finished products produced from those raw materials. As a result, most of the lucrative value-added processing occurs in Japan.

This value-added strategy has been especially effective regarding wood products. Japan imposes few barriers against imports of logs, but imposes many formidable barriers against imports of processed wood products. As a result, many jobs that might be in Missoula, MT, or Bend, OR, are carefully protected in Sapporo or Osaka, Japan.

Let me explain the problem more fully:

The United States is the world's leading producer of wood products. We have abundant resources, skilled workers, and advanced technology. That's why the Office of Technology Assessment recently concluded that "the United States is well positioned to satisfy * * * a major share of future world forest products requirements."

The U.S. wood products industry is very conscious of the potential value of foreign markets, and is exporting aggressively to them. For example, U.S. exports of processed wood products increased from about 3.5 percent of total U.S. production in 1970 to more than 9 percent of total U.S. production in the early 1980's.

Many of our wood products exports are produced from softwoods like Douglas-fir, ponderosa pine, lodgepole pine, and spruce, which are cut, milled and processed throughout the Northwest. For example, western Montana is a competitive producer of softwood lumber, plywood, and particleboard, all of which have significant existing or potential export markets.

Because it has so few harvestable forests, Japan depends heavily on wood products imports. The United States is Japan's main import supplier, and Japan is our main export customer. Last year, we exported $1.1 billion worth of wood products to Japan; in recent years, we have exported almost 2 billion dollars' worth.

The Japanese market is especially attractive because of Japan's active homebuilding industry. In fact, in some recent years, the number of housing starts in Japan has actually exceeded the number here. What's more, Japanese construction methods are changing in ways that make the Japanese market more attractive to U.S. producers. American standards have been adopted for certain products, and the U.S. platform-frame construction method has been copied. Although this type of construction now accounts for less than 2 percent of home construction, it is expected to account for as much as 20 percent by 1990.

But, so far, Japan's high tariffs on processed wood products have prevented U.S. producers from fully participating in this substantial market. The following chart illustrates the effect Japan's tariffs have in protecting the Japanese domestic industry:

Product	Tariff	Imports as a percent of total Japanese consumption (1980)
Softwood logs	0	50
Softwood lumber (pine and spruce/fir only)	6–9	14
Particleboard	12	7
Plywood	15	1
Veneer	15	2
Laminated lumber	20	[1]

[1] Less than 1 percent.

Japan's high tariffs on processed wood products contrast starkly with other developed countries' tariffs. For example, America's tariffs on veneer, particle board, and the type of plywood used in Japan range from 0 to 8 percent; the European Community's range from 0 to 10 percent. Even some less-developed Asian countries, like Taiwan, have lower tariffs on processed wood products than Japan does.

Mr. President, Japan's protectionist value-added strategy, embodied in these high tariffs on processed wood products, is inconsistent with Japan's commitment to free trade. What's more, it denies the American wood products industry about $500 million a year in potential sales.

For years, the U.S. Government has been pointing this out and urging Japan to reduce its tariffs on processed wood products.

For example, during the Tokyo Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, U.S. negotiators repeatedly requested reductions in Japan's processed wood products tariffs. But Japan refused to make any significant reductions.

Since then, U.S. negotiators have continued to request significant reductions. The United States has even offered to make corresponding concessions by reducing its tariffs on plywood produced in Japan—Japan now sells us 15 times more plywood than we sell them.

Last year, the Japanese led us to believe that their processed wood products tariffs finally would be reduced, after the sometimes acrimonious United States-Japan beef dispute was resolved.

But the Japanese let us down. Earlier this year, shortly after the beef issue was resolved, Japan announced a package of tariff reductions for 1985; but there was nothing in this package for the U.S. wood products industry.

Many Americans were deeply concerned about Japan's failure to make the processed wood products tariff cuts that we thought were forthcoming. I and several other Senators and Congressmen wrote to Ambassador Okawara and to Prime Minister Nakasone to express our concern. Ambassador Brock said that "the absence of any mention whatsoever of forest products among the tariff reductions is particularly disappointing." Vice President BUSH said that "the failure of the Japanese to act in this area was the biggest disappointment in their trade package." And the National Forest Products Association adopted a resolution urging Japan to "truly open its markets by sharply reducing the prohibitive tariffs on processed wood products."

Japan's repeated refusals to reduce its tariffs are especially baffling given the benefits Japan would gain from reductions. For example, lower tariffs would mean, for Japan:

Potentially lower housing, construction, and other product costs and a strengthened competitive position for Japanese wood users and consumers.

Greater stability of raw material supply for Japanese wood products manufacturers, because more open markets for processed products will tend to ensure that the United States continue to keep its raw materials flowing to Japan; and

A closer alliance, for Japan's exporters of other products, with a major American industry which has been one of the strongest supporters of open markets.

Even so, the Japanese have remained intransigent. Recently, Japan's Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Okawara, responded to requests for tariff reductions by writing that Japan would try to increase housing demand "so that we may have a better climate in which we can study the tariff reduction more positively."

To me, this sounds like classic stonewalling. Recent events confirm this interpretation. Just last week, our top trade negotiator, Ambassador Mike Smith, again raised the issue with a Japanese trade delegation he met with here in Washington. But the Japanese refused to commit to any reductions in their processed wood products tariffs.

An old Japanese proverb says that "the sack of a man's patience is tied with a slip knot."

Mr. President, our patience is running out. Japan's value-added strategy embodied in its prohibitively high tariffs on processed wood products, is inconsistent with the basic principles of free trade, and hurts a U.S. industry that has been one of the leading defenders of those principles.

If Japan's tariffs are not reduced substantially, and soon, I am concerned that this issue could have a serious effect on our overall bilateral trade relationship.

I know that many of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, share my concern. Therefore, Senator PACKWOOD and I are introducing a resolution that conveys the sense of the Congress that Japan should substantially reduce its tariffs on processed wood products, including plywood, particle board, veneer, and lumber. Furthermore, the resolution conveys the sense of the Congress that, if Japan refuses to take such action, its refusal will seriously impede the development of better relations between our countries.

Since there is little time left until we adjourn, we do not intend to press for a vote on the resolution during this Congress. However, we are introducing it now to put the Japanese Government on notice that, if its processed wood products tariffs are not substantially reduced by the time the 99th Congress convenes in late January, we intend to reintroduce the resolution, request Finance Committee hearings on it, and press hard for its early adoption.

Mr. President, as a friend of the Japanese Government and Japanese people, I sincerely hope that it will not be necessary to reintroduce this resolution, or to consider further legislative action, in January. Instead I hope that, by then, Japan's tariffs will have substantially reduced and our countries will have taken another step to make free trade a two-way street.●

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Montana in introducing this resolution on Japanese tariffs for forest products. This resolution would declare that it is the sense of the Congress that Japan should substantially reduce its tariffs on processed wood products, including plywood, particle board, veneer, and lumber. It acknowledges that Japan's refusal to reduce these tariffs is a serious impediment to the development of better trade relations between the United States and Japan.

We are introducing this resolution today to put the Japanese Government on notice of our deep concern and hope that this issue will be resolved favorably in the near future. Clearly, there is not enough time left in this session of Congress to hold hearings on this resolution and push for adoption by Congress. Nevertheless, this issue is of such great importance to forest products producers in the Pacific Northwest, and the United States as a whole, that we feel it warrants review by our colleagues here in the Senate, as well as our trading partners abroad.

Mr. President, trade in forest products is of prime importance to my State of Oregon and to the Pacific Northwest. Trade between Japan and the United States in wood products has been historically strong. It could be stronger still but for one serious problem—the high Japanese tariffs on imports of U.S. forest products.

Japan allows unprocessed wood products to enter its markets duty free. But processed wood products—specifically plywood, veneer, and particle board—face tariffs of 12 to 15 percent. These rates are extremely high when compared with Japan's average tariff of 3 percent on all products. Reduction of these tariffs on forest products is one of the most important actions Japan can take to open its markets to U.S. producers, and improve trade relations between our countries.

Mr. President, as a Senator from a State with a timber-based economy I am painfully aware of the need to expand export opportunities for processed wood products. The timber and home building industries across the Nation, and especially in Oregon, have been sluggish in recovering from the recent recession. It is imperative that these industries gain a strong foothold in our Nation's economic recovery.

A healthy housing industry, of which forest products are a key component, is an integral part of a healthy economy. I am convinced that increased export opportunities for our forest products industry will provide a much needed boost to the overall health of our Nation's economy. This can be accomplished best through reductions in Japanese tariffs on U.S. forest products.

Mr. President, because of the concern of this issue to my State of Oregon I have tried for several years to convince the Japanese Government to lower its tariffs on plywood, veneer, and particleboard. I had hoped that the trade package announced by the Japanese Government last April would include tariff reductions for processed wood products. As you know, in April, Japan announced a wide variety of trade measures designed to promote economic relations between Japan and the United States. These measures included relaxations of import restrictions on beef, citrus, and other agricultural products; internationalization of the Yen; and investment promotion. Regrettably, this package did not include tariff reductions for U.S. forest products, despite their being identified by our Government as a top priority.

Mr. President, our efforts, so far, to reduce Japanese wood products tariffs have been unsuccessful. The time has come for the U.S. Congress to call on Japan to eliminate this stumbling block to better economic relations.

Our producers simply want an equal opportunity to compete in Japan's processed wood products markets. I am convinced that reducing the tariffs blocking access to these markets poses no threat to Japan's wood products industries. Our forest products producers are the primary suppliers of raw materials for Japan's wood products industry. The tariff reductions we seek would benefit Japanese consumers by lowering housing and furniture costs, and lead to greater supply assurances for Japan's wood products producers. Reduced tariffs on U.S. forest products would also benefit Japan's export industries by reducing trade friction and easing protectionist pressures here in the United States.

Mr. President, it is my deep hope that Japan will take action in the near future to reduce their tariffs on plywood, veneer, and particleboard. In the long run, I am convinced that both the United States and Japan will benefit greatly through lowering barriers to trade.

Our U.S. trade negotiators involved in talks with the Japanese Government aimed at reducing tariffs on processed wood products. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting reduced Japanese tariffs for this important U.S. industry.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 452—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. SYMMS, from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 452

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 3024, a bill to approve the Interstate and Interstate Substitute Cost Estimates, to amend title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes.

Such waiver is necessary because section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1972 provides that it shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill or resolution which, directly or indirectly, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority for fiscal year, unless that bill or resolution is reported in the House or the Senate, as the case may be, on or before May 15 preceeding the beginning of such fiscal year.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works met and made a good faith effort to report S. 3024 prior to the May 25, 1984, reporting deadline for fiscal year 1985 authorizations. However, due to circumstances beyond their control, the Committee was unable to report this bill prior to May 25, 1984.

Pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of Section 402(a) of Such Act are waived with respect to S. 3024 as reported by the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

AMENDMENT No. 4800

At the end of the bill, add the following: That this Act may be cited as the "Cable-Porn and Dial-Porn Control Act".

SEC. . (a) Section 1464 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1464. Broadcasting, telecasting, or cablecasting of obscene, indecent, or profane language; distributing obscene or indecent material by means of radio, television, or cable television.

"(a) Whoever knowingly utters any obscene language, or distributes any obscene material, by means of radio, television, or cable television communication shall be fined not more than $20,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

"(b) Whoever knowingly utters any indecent or profane language, or distributes any indecent or profane material, by means of radio, television, or cable television communication shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

"(c) As used in this section, the term—

"(1) 'obscene language' or 'obscene material' means any language or material respectively which—

"(A) the average person, applying contemporary community standards for radio or television, would find, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest;

"(B) depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way (i) an ultimate sexual act, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, (ii) masturbation, (iii) an excretory function, (iv) a lewd exhibition of a human genital organ, or (v) flagellation, torture, or other violence, indicating a sado-masochistic sexual relationship; and

"(C) taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value;

"(2) 'indecent language' or 'indecent material' means a depiction or description of (A) a human sexual or excretory organ or function, (B) nudity, (C) an ultimate sexual act, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, (D) masturbation, (E) flagellation, torture, or other violence, indicating a sado-masochistic sexual relationship, which under contemporary community standards for radio or television is presented in a patently offensive way; and

"(3) 'distribute' means to send, transmit, retransmit, telecast, broadcast, or cablecast, including by wire or satellite, or produce or provide such language or material for distribution.

"(d) Nothing in this section is intended to interfere with or preempt the power and right of the several States, including political subdivisions thereof, over franchises or to regulate in this area as to obscenity, indecency, or profanity, within their respective jurisdictions, in a manner which is not inconsistent with this section.".

(b) The analysis of chapter 71 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by deleting "1464. Broadcasting obscene language." and inserting in lieu thereof "1464. "(B) knowingly permits any telephone facility under such person's control to be used for any purpose prohibited by subparagraph (A), shall be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

"(2)(A) In addition to the criminal penalties under paragraph (1), whoever, in the District of Columbia or in interstate or foreign communication, violates paragraph (1)(A) or (1)(B) for commercial purposes shall be subject to a civil fine of not more than $50,000 for each violation. For purposes of this paragraph, each day of violation shall constitute a separate violation.

"(B) A fine under this paragraph may be assessed either—

AMENDMENT No. 4802

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . (a) This section may be cited as the "Neighborhood School Act of 1984".

(b) The Congress finds that—

(1) court orders requiring transportation of students to or attendance at public schools other than the one closest to their residences for the purpose of achieving racial balance or racial desegregation have proven to be ineffective remedies to achieve unitary school systems;

(2) such orders frequently result in the exodus from public school systems of children causing even greater racial imbalance and diminished public support for public school systems;

(3) assignment and transportation of students to public schools other than the one closest to their residence is expensive and wasteful of scarce petroleum fuels;

(4) there is an absence of social science evidence to suggest that the costs of school busing outweigh the disruptiveness of busing; and

(5) assignment of students to public schools closest to their residence (neighborhood public schools) is the preferred method of public school attendance.

(c) The Congress is hereby exercising its power under article III, section 1, and under section 5 of the fourteenth amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

(d) Section 1651 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection (c):

"(c)(1) No court of the United States may order or issue any writ directly or indirectly ordering any student to be assigned or to be transported to a public school other than that which is closest to the student's residence unless—

"(i) such assignment of transportation is provided incident to the voluntary attendance of a student at a public school, including a magnet, vocational, technical, or other school of specialized or individualized instruction; or

"(ii) the requirement of such transportation is reasonable.

"(2) The assignment or transportation of students shall not be reasonable if—

"(i) there are reasonable alternatives available which involve less time in travel, distance, danger, or inconvenience;

"(ii) such assignment or transportation requires a student to cross a school district having the same grade level as that of the student;

"(iii) such transportation plan or order or part thereof is likely to result in a greater degree of racial imbalance in the public school system than was in existence on the date of the order for such assignment or transportation plan or is likely to have a net harmful effect on the quality of education in the public school district;

"(iv) the total actual daily time consumed in travel by schoolbus for any student exceeds thirty minutes unless such transportation is to and from a public school closest to the student's residence with a grade level identical to that of the student; or

"(v) the total actual round trip distance traveled by schoolbus for any student exceeds 10 miles unless the actual round trip distance traveled by schoolbus is to and from the public school closest to the student's residence with a grade level identical to that of the student.".

(e) The school closest to the student's residence with a grade level identical to that of the student shall, for purpose of calculating the time and distance limitations of this Act, be deemed to be that school containing the appropriate grade level which existed immediately prior to any court order or writ resulting in the reassignment by whatever means, direct or indirect including rezoning, reassignment, pairing, clustering, school closings, magnet schools or other methods of school assignment and whether or not such court order or writ predated the effective date of this legislation.

(f) Section 407(a) of title IV of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Public Law 88-352, section 407(a); 78 Stat. 241, section 407(a); 42 U.S.C. 2000c-6(a)), is amended by inserting after the last sentence the following:

Whenever the Attorney General receives a complaint in writing signed by an individual, or his parent, to the effect that he has been required directly or indirectly to attend or to be transported to a public school in violation of the Neighborhood School Act and the Attorney General believes that the complaint is meritorious and certifies that the signers of such complaint are unable, in his judgment, to initiate and maintain appropriate legal proceedings for relief, the Attorney General is authorized to insitute for or in the name of the United States a civil action in any appropriate district court of the United States against such parties and for such relief as may be appropriate, and such court shall have and shall exercise jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this section. The Attorney General may implead as defendants such additional parties as are or become necessary to the grant of effective relief hereunder.".

(g) For the purpose of this Act, "transportation to a public school in violation of the Neighborhood School Act" shall be deemed to have occurred whether or not the order requiring directly or indirectly such transportation or assignment was entered prior to or subsequent to the effective date of this Act.

(h) If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"(g)(1) Each licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, and licensed dealer, shall maintain such records of importation, production, shipment, receipt, sale, or other disposition, of firearms at his place of business for such period, and in such form, as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. Such importers, manufacturers and dealers shall not be required to submit to the Secretary reports and information with respect to such records and the contents thereof, except as explicity required by the Act entitled 'An Act to protect firearms owners' constitutional rights, civil liberties and rights to privacy'. The Secretary, when he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this law has occurred, and that evidence thereof may be found on such premises may, upon demonstrating such cause before a Federal magistrate, and securing from him a warrant authorizing entry, enter during business hours the premises (including places of storage) of any licensed firearms importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, licensed collector or any licensed importer or manufacturer of ammunition, for the purposes of inspecting or examining (1) any records or documents required to be kept by such licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector under the provisions of this chapter or regulations issued under this chapter, and (2) any firearms or ammunition kept or stored by such licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, at such premises. The Secretary may remove such records from the record center maintained by the Administrator of General Services only in connection with proceedings in any court or any administrative proceeding of the United States or of any state.

"(C) The Administrator of General Services may promulgate regulations governing the storage, processing and servicing of records stored under this paragraph: Provided, That no such regulations may restrict the authority of the Secretary under this paragraph to have access to or to remove such records.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of General Services shall dispose of records kept by licensed dealers and licensed collectors, and records relating to the disposition of firearms kept by manufacturers and importers, and stored under this paragraph twenty years after such records are received by the Administrator of General Services and the Secretary.

"(4)(A) each licensee shall, when required by letter issued by the Secretary, and until notified to the contrary in writing by the Secretary, submit on a form specified by the Secretary, for the periods and at the times specified in such letter, all record information required by this chapter or such lesser record information as the Secretary in his letter may specify.

"(C) No warrant shall issue nor shall any criminal charges be brought against the licensee based solely upon information provided pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph.

"(5)(A) Each licensee shall prepare a report of multiple sales or other disposition whenever the licensee sells or otherwise disposes of, at one time or during any five consecutive business days, two or more pistols, or revolvers, or any combination of pistols and revolvers totaling two or more, to an unlicensed person. The report shall be prepared on a form specified by the Secretary and forwarded to the office specified thereon not later than the close of business on the day that the multiple sale or other disposition occurs.

"(B) Ten years after receiving any report submitted under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Secretary shall deliver such report to the joint custody of the Administrator of General Services and the Secretary to be stored in a records center maintained and operated by the Administrator of General Services, subject to the provisions of sections 923(g)(3) (B) and (C) of this title. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of General Services shall dispose of records stored under this subparagraph ten years after such records are received by the Administrator of General Services and the Secretary."

"(C) No record, form, or information delivered, submitted, or forwarded pursuant to this paragraph or paragraph (3) or (4) of this subsection may be kept by the Secretary at a centralized location, nor shall it be entered into a computer for storage or retrieval."; and

(7) by amending subsection (j) to read as follows:

"(j) A licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, conduct business temporarily at a location other than the location specified on the license if such other location is in the State which is specified on the license. Nothing in this subsection shall authorize any licensee to conduct business in or from any motorized or towed vehicle. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, a separate fee shall not be required of a licensee with respect to business conducted under this subsection. Except for records directly related to receipts, sales, or other dispositions of firearms made at the temporary premises within the period of time the licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer conducted the business of which such receipts, sales, or other dispositions were a part, nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to inspect or examine the inventory or records of a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer at any location other than the location specified on the license. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to diminish in any manner any right to display, sell or otherwise dispose of firearms or ammunition which is in effect prior to the date of enactment of the Act entitled 'An Act to protect firearms owners' constitutional rights, civil liberties and rights to privacy'.".

AMENDMENT NO. 4811

At the end of the bill insert the following:

This amendment may be cited as the "Public School Civil Rights Act of 1983".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the assignment of students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin by inferior Federal courts—

(A) violates constitutional and legal guarantees that individuals shall not be denied equal protection of the law;

(B) violates constitutional and legal guarantees that individual rights shall not be abridged on the basis of race, color, or national origin;

(C) has failed to demonstrate educational benefits commensurate with the disruption caused by such assignment;

(D) has failed to demonstrate social benefits commensurate with the disruption caused by such assignment;

(E) has contributed to a significant deterioration of public schools in the districts subject to such orders regarding assignment by inducing large numbers of families to migrate away from such districts;

(F) has contributed to the deterioration of public education by removing the neighborhood school as the focus of such education;

(G) has disrupted the education of countless schoolchildren who must endure lengthy transportation to and from school each day, and, as a result, must often forego participation in extra-curricular activities occurring after school;

(H) has eroded community commitment to public schools and public education;

(I) interferes with the right of parents to make decisions regarding the education of their children;

(J) disrupts racial harmony by characterizing and classifying students on the basis of race or color and assigning them to schools on such basis;

(K) diverts significant amounts of financial resources away from direct improvement of the quality of education;

(L) usurps the responsibilities and traditional functions of State and local authorities to provide an educational system meeting the distinct needs of the community; and

(M) undermines public respect for the Government and its system of administering law and justice;

(2) past unconstitutional segregation, such as racial segregation enforced by law, is not a significant cause of existing racial imbalances in public schools,

(3) since assignment of students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race cannot be justified as a means of preventing or undoing racial discrimination by school authorities, such assignment is itself an unjustifiable practice of racial discrimination by the Government in violation of the fourteenth amendment; and

(4) whatever the basic cause of racial imbalance in the public schools, assignment of students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin results in more segregation of the races by inducing large numbers of families to migrate away from school systems subject to such assignment or by inducing large number of families to seek alternatives to public school education.

SEC. 3. (a) The Congress finds the remedies listed in subsection (b) are available for unconstitutional segregation exclusive of court orders which assign students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin, finding that such orders themselves have the effect of excluding students from public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin.

(b) The remedies which the Congress finds are available are—

(1) legal injunctions suspending all implementation of a segregative law or other racially discriminatory Government action;

(2) contempt of court proceedings where such injunctions are not scrupulously obeyed;

(3) programs without coercion or numerical quotas or specific goals based on racial balance that permit students to voluntarily transfer to other schools within the school district where they reside; and

(4) other local initiatives and plans to improve education for all students without regard to race, color, or national origin.

SEC. 4. The Congress, pursuant to its authority and powers granted under article III of the Constitution, and under section 5 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, enacts the provisions of this Act in order to protect public school students against discrimination on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin.

SEC. 5. Section 1343 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by designating the current language as section (a) and adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no inferior court established by Congress shall have jurisdiction to issue any order requiring the assignment or transportation of any student to public elementary or secondary schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin or to issue any order which excludes any student from any public school on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin.

"(2) In the case of court orders entered prior to the date of this Act that require the assignment or transportation of any student to a public elementary or secondary school on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin or which excludes any student from any school on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin, any individual or school board or other school authority subject to such an order shall be entitled to seek relief from such order in any court and unless that court can make conclusive findings based on clear and convincing evidence that—

"(1) the acts that gave rise to the existing court order intentionally and specifically caused, and in the absence of the order would continue intentionally and specifically to cause, students to be assigned to or excluded from public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin; for purposes of this finding, these 'acts that gave rise to the existing court order and intentionally and specifically caused, and in the absence of the order would continue intentionally and specifically to cause, students to be assigned to or excluded from public schools on the basis of race, color, or national origin' (including but not limited to school district reorganization, school boundary line changes, school construction, and school closings) shall not include legitimate efforts to employ public education resources to meet public education needs without regard to race, creed, or national origin,

"(2) the totality of circumstances have not changed since issuance of the order to warrant reconsideration of the order.

"(3) no other remedy, including those mentioned herein, would preclude the intentional and specific segregation, and

"(4) the economic, social, and educational benefits of the order have clearly outweighed the economic, social, and educational costs of the order, then such plaintiffs shall be entitled to relief which is consistent with the provisions of this subsection and the Public School Civil Rights Act of 1981 from such order.".

SEC. 5. Chapter 89 of title 28 of the United States Code (relating to district courts' removal of cases from State courts) is amended by adding after section 1455(c) the following new subsection:

"(d) A civil action in any State court seeking a judgment for any relief described in this Act may not be removed to any district court of the United States.".

PENALTIES

SEC 309. (a) Section 507 of title 49 United States Code, is amended—

Such district court shall have jurisdiction to determine any such action and may grant such relief as is necessary or appropriate, including mandatory or prohibitive injunctive relief, interim equitable relief, and punitive damages.".

(b) Section 521(b) of title 49, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) If the Secretary finds that a violation of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or a violation of a regulation issued under such section or such Act, has occurred, the Secretary shall issue a written notice to the violator. Such notice shall describe with reasonable particularity the nature of the violation found and the provision which has been violated. The notice shall fix a reasonable time for abatement of the violation, specify the proposed civil penalty, if any, and suggest actions which might be taken in order to abate the violation. The notice shall indicate that the violator may, within 15 days of service, notify the Secretary of the violator's intention to contest the matter. In the event of a contested notice, the Secretary shall afford such violator an opportunity for a hearing, pursuant to section 554 of title 5, following which the Secretary shall issue an order affirming, modifying, or vacating the notice of violation.

"(2) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, any person who is determined by the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, to have committed an act which is a violation of recordkeeping requirements issued by the Secretary pursuant to section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984 shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty not to exceed $500 for each offense. Each day of a violation of recordkeeping requirements shall constitute a separate offense, except that the total of all civil penalties assessed against any violator for such violations shall not exceed $2,500. If the Secretary determines that a serious pattern of safety violations, other than recordkeeping requirements exists or has occurred, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000 for each offense: Provided, however, That the maximum fine for each such pattern of safety violations shall not exceed $10,000. If the Secretary determines that a substantial health or safety violation exists or has occurred which could reasonably lead to, or has resulted in, serious personal injury or death, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each offense: Provided, however, That, except for recordkeeping violations, no civil penalty provided under this section shall be assessed against an employee for a violation of this section unless the Secretary determines that such employee's actions constituted gross negligence or reckless disregard for safety, in which case such employee shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000. The amount of any civil penalty, and a reasonable time for abatement of the violation, shall by written order be determined by the Secretary, taking into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation committed and, with respect to the violation, the degree of culpability, history of prior offenses, ability to pay, effect on ability to continue to do business, and such other matters as justice and public safety may require. In each case, the assessment shall be calculated to induce further compliance.

"(3) The Secretary may require any violator served with a notice of violation to post a copy of such notice or statement of such notice in such place or places and for such duration as the Secretary may determine appropriate to aid in the enforcement of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984.

"(4) Such civil penalty may be recovered in an action brought by the Attorney General on behalf of the United States in the appropriate district court of the United States or, before referral to the Attorney General, such civil penalty may be compromised by the Secretary.

"(5)(A) If, upon inspection or investigation, the Secretary determines that a violation, or combination of violations, poses an imminent hazard to safety, the Secretary shall order a vehicle or employee operating such vehicle out of service, or order an employer to cease all or part of the employer's commercial motor vehicle operations. In making any such order, the Secretary shall impose no restriction on any employee or employer beyond that required to abate the hazard. Subsequent to the issuance of the order, opportunity for review shall be provided in accordance with section 554 of title 5, except that such review shall occur not later than 10 days after issuance of such order.

"(B) In this paragraph, 'imminent hazard' means any condition of vehicle, employee, or commercial motor vehicle operations which is likely to result in serious injury or death if not discontinued immediately.

"(6) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or a regulation issued under this title or such Act, shall, upon conviction, be subject for each offense for a fine not to exceed $25,000 or imprisonment for a term not to exceed 1 year, or both, except that, if such violator is an employee, the violator shall only be subject to penalty if, while operating a commercial motor vehicle, the violator's activities have led or could have lead to death or serious injury, in which case the violator shall be liable, upon conviction, for a fine not to exceed $2,500.

"(7) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations establishing penalty schedules designed to induce timely compliance for persons failing to comply promptly with the requirements set forth in any notices and orders under this subsection.

"(8) Any aggrieved person who, after a hearing, is adversely affected by a final order issued under this section may, within 30 days, petition for review of the order in the United States court of appeals in the circuit wherein the violation is alleged to have occurred or where the violator has his principal place of business or residence, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Review of the order shall be based on a determination of whether the Secretary's findings and conclusions were supported by substantial evidence, or were otherwise not in accordance with law. No objection that has not been urged before the Secretary shall be considered by the court, unless reasonable grounds existed for failure or neglect to do so. The commencement of proceeding under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Secretary.

"(9) All penalties and fines collected under this section shall be deposited into the Highway Trust Fund.

"(10) In any action brought under this section, process may be served without regard to the territorial limits of the district of the State in which the action is brought.

"(11) In any proceeding for criminal contempt for violation of an injunction or restraining order issued under this section, trial shall be by the court, or, upon demand of the accused, by a jury, conducted in accordance with the provisions of rule 42(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(12) As used in this subsection, the term—

"(A) 'commerce' means (i) trade traffic, or transportation within the jurisdiction of the United States between a place in a State and a place outside of such State, or (ii) in the case of a commercial motor vehicle transporting passengers, which affects trade, traffic, or transportation between a place in a State and a place outside of such State;

"(B) 'commercial motor vehicle' means any self-propelled or towed vehicle used on the highways in commerce principally to transport passengers or cargo—

"(i) if such vehicle has a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 or more pounds;

"(ii) a mechanic;

"(iii) a freight handler; or

"(iv) any individual other than an employer; who is employed by a commercial motor carrier and who in the course of this employment directly affects commercial motor vehicle safety, but such term does not include an employee of the United States or any State who is acting within the course of such employment;

"(D) 'employer' means any person engaged in a business affecting commerce who owns or leases a commercial motor vehicle in connection with that business, or assigns employees to operate it in commerce, but such term does not include the United States or any State;

"(F) 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, or a political subdivision thereof.

"(13) The provisions of this subsection shall not affect in any way any provision of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act (49 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) or any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under such Act.".

(c) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the effectiveness of the civil and criminal penalties established under this title in deterring violations of the commercial motor vehicle safety regulations issued under this title and in effectively prosecuting such violations when they occur. Such study shall examine the effectiveness of penalties in effect before the date of enactment of this Act in comparison to the penalties established by this title. Such study shall also investigate the need for, and make recommendations concerning, increased fine levels for civil and criminal penalties, and the need for additional categories of civil and criminal penalties to deter further and prosecute effectively violations of such commercial motor vehicle safety regulations. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this study, together with legislative recommendations, not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

LITIGATION AUTHORITY

SEC. 310. Section 413 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. 2313) is amended by striking "The Secretary, or, on" and inserting in lieu thereof "On".

STATE REGULATIONS

SEC. 311. (a) Except as may otherwise be provided in this title or any other Act, all laws, rules, regulations, standards, and orders relating to commercial motor vehicle safety shall be nationally uniform, to the extent practicable. A State may adopt or continue in effect any law, rule, regulation, standard, or order relating to commercial motor vehicle safety, other than hours-of-service regulations applicable to intrastate commerce, until the Secretary has adopted a new rule, regulation, standard, or order, or has continued in effect an existing Federal regulation, regarding the subject matter of such State requirements, pursuant to the provisions of this section.

(b) Within 1 month after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue initial guidelines to assist the States in compiling and submitting materials related to commercial motor vehicle safety laws, rules, regulations, standards, or orders. Within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act, each State shall submit to the Secretary each law, rule, regulation, standard, and order for commercial motor vehicle safety which the State has adopted and has in effect.

(c)(1) A study of the laws, rules regulations, standards and orders submitted under subsection (b) of this section shall be undertaken by a panel established by the Secretary for that purpose. The Secretary shall be the Chairman of the panel. In addition to the Secretary, the panel shall consist of not more than 15 individuals selected by the Secretary on the basis of their knowledge, expertise or experience regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. The Secretary shall, to the maximum extent possible, ensure that the members of the panel reflect diverse business, consumer and safety interests regarding commercial motor vehicles, as well as State and regional interests. Members of the panel shall receive no compensation, but shall, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, be entitled to reimbursement for travel or transportation expenses incurred in the performance of responsibilities as a member of the panel.

(2) The study required by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall consider the material submitted by States under subsectin (b) of this section, and shall identify those laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders for commercial motor vehicle saftey which are inconsistent with the objective of national uniformity. In addition, the study shall consider those instances where inconsistency of such laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders is necessary of desirable. The study shall also evaluate the need, if any, for Federal assistance to States to enable States to comply with laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders for commercial motor vehicle safety that are nationally uniform.

(3) Not later than eighteeen months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit the results of such study to the Congress, and shall make such results available for public inspection.

(d)(1) Within six months after the completion of the study required by subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary shall commence a rulemaking proceeding to promulgate rules regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. If the Secretary finds on the basis of such study that an existing Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulation better serves the purposes of this title than would a new regulation, the Secretary shall continue such existing regulation in effect. Any rules promulgated under this paragraph shall be based upon such study, and any such rule shall only be promulgated if the Secretary finds that it does not adversely affect any State law, rule, regulation, standard, or order—

(A) for which there is a compelling local safety need;

(B) which is not incompatible with any Federal law, rule, regulation, standard, or order; and

(C) which does not unduly burden interstate commerce.

(2) Any such rule shall be promulgated in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, except that the Secretary shall afford interested persons an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

(e)(1) After the promulgation of any rule under subsection (d) of this section, any State may petition the Secretary for a waiver from application to the State of such rule. The Secretary shall grant such waiver as expeditiously as possible, unless the Secretary finds that—

(A) there is no compelling safety need within such State for such safety rules; or

(B) the grant of such waiver will unduly burden interstate commerce.

(2) The decision to grant or deny a petition for a waiver submitted under this section shall only be made after the Secretary has afforded the relevant State an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

(f)(1) Not later than 60 days after a rule is promulgated under subsection (d) or action is taken regarding a waiver under subsection (e) of this section, any person adversely affected by such rule or action may file with the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia or for the circuit in which such person resides or has his principal place of business a petition for judicial review of such rule or action.

(2) Upon the filing of a petition under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the court shall have jurisdiction to review such rule or action in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, and to grant appropriate relief, including interim relief, as provided in such chapter. Such rule or action shall be affirmed unless the Secretary's finding under subsections (d) and (e) of this section are supported by substantial evidence on the record taken as a whole.

(3) The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such rule or action shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(4) The remedies provided for in this subsection shall be in addition to and not in lieu of any other remedies provided by law.

(g) Nothing in this title shall affect existing hour-of-service regulations of any State applying to commercial motor vehicle operations occurring wholly within that State, unless the Secretary affirmatively finds upon review of a State's hour-of-service regulations that such regulations—

(1) materially diminish commercial motor vehicle safety or the health and safety of employees;

(2) are not required by compelling local conditions; or

(3) unduly burden interstate commerce.

If the Secretary makes such an affirmative determination, the Secretary may require such State to adopt Federal hour-of-service regulations.

(h) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the safety performance of commercial motor vehicles operating in intrastate commerce. This study shall examine the effectiveness of individual State regulations governing such transportation in promoting safety in commercial motor vehicle safety operations. Such study shall also investigate the need to subject such transportation to the Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulations, either in whole or in part. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this investigation and study not later than two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

INSPECTION

SEC. 312. (a) Upon the instruction of a duly authorized State or Federal enforcement official, each commercial motor vehicle shall be required to pass an inspection of all safety equipment required under part 393 of subchapter B of chapter 3 of title 49, Code of Federal Regulations.

(b) The Secretary shall, by rule, establish Federal standards for inspections of commercial motor vehicles no less often than annually, and retention by employers of records of such inspections. Such standards are to be considered minimum Federal standards.

(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed as preventing any State or voluntary group of States from imposing more stringent standards for use in their own periodic roadside inspection programs.

(d) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall initiate a rulemaking to afford interested parties an opportunity to comment on such part 393 and the inspection or retention procedure established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. Amendments to the regulations shall be issued and published in the Federal Register no later than 1 year after such rulemaking is initiated. The amended regulations shall become effective on the date on which they are published in the Federal Register.

(e) A periodic inspection of a commercial motor vehicle in accordance with Federal standards established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be recognized as adequate in every State for the period of such inspection. The provisions of this subsection shall not be deemed to prohibit a State from making random inspections of commercial motor vehicles.

CERTIFICATIONS OF SAFETY FITNESS

SEC. 313. (a) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall by rule, after notice and opportunity for comment. Establish a procedure to determine the safety fitness of commercial motor vehicles, including persons seeking new or additional operating authority as motor carriers of property or passengers under sections 10922 and 10923 of title 49, United States Code. Such procedure shall include—

Such district court shall have jurisdiction to determine any such action and may grant such relief as is necessary or appropriate, including mandatory or prohibitive injunctive relief, interim equitable relief, and punitive damages.".

(b) Section 521(b) of title 49, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) If the Secretary finds that a violation of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or a violation of a regulation issued under such section or such Act, has occurred, the Secretary shall issue a written notice to the violator. Such notice shall describe with reasonable particularity the nature of the violation found and the provision which has been violated. The notice shall fix a reasonable time for abatement of the violation, specify the proposed civil penalty, if any, and suggest actions which might be taken in order to abate the violation. The notice shall indicate that the violator may, within 15 days of service, notify the Secretary of the violator's intention to contest the matter. In the event of a contested notice, the Secretary shall afford such violator an opportunity for a hearing, pursuant to section 554 of title 5, following which the Secretary shall issue an order affirming, modifying, or vacating the notice of violation.

"(2) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, any person who is determined by the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, to have committed an act which is a violation of recordkeeping requirements issued by the Secretary pursuant to section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984 shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty not to exceed $500 for each offense. Each day of a violation of recordkeeping requirements shall constitute a separate offense, except that the total of all civil penalties assessed against any violator for such violations shall not exceed $2,500. If the Secretary determines that a serious pattern of safety violations, other than recordkeeping requirements, exists or has occurred, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000 for each offense: Provided, however, That the maximum fine for each such pattern of safety violations shall not exceed $10,000. If the Secretary determines that a substantial health or safety violation exists or has occurred which could reasonably lead to, or has resulted in, serious personal injury or death, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each offense: Provided, however, That, except for recordkeeping violations, no civil penalty provided under this section shall be assessed against an employee for a violation of this section unless the Secretary determines that such employee's actions constituted gross negligence or reckless disregard for safety, in which case such employee shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000. The amount of any civil penalty, and a reasonable time for abatement of the violation, shall by written order be determined by the Secretary, taking into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation committed and, with respect to the violation, the degree of culpability, history of prior offenses, ability to pay, effect on ability to continue to do business, and such other matters as justice and public safety may require. In each case, the assessment shall be calculated to induce further compliance.

"(3) The Secretary may require any violator served with a notice of violation to post a copy of such notice or statement of such notice in such place or places and for such duration as the Secretary may determine appropriate to aid in the enforcement of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984.

"(4) Such civil penalty may be recovered in an action brought by the Attorney General on behalf of the United States in the appropriate district court of the United States or, before referral to the Attorney General, such civil penalty may be compromised by the Secretary.

"(5)(A) If, upon inspection or investigation, the Secretary determines that a violation, or combination of violations, poses an imminent hazard to safety, the Secretary shall order a vehicle or employee operating such vehicle out of service, or order an employer to cease all or part of the employer's commercial motor vehicle operations. In making any such order, the Secretary shall impose no restriction on any employee or employer beyond that required to abate the hazard. Subsequent to the issuance of the order, opportunity for review shall be provided in accordance with section 554 of title 5, except that such review shall occur not later than 10 days after issuance of such order.

"(B) In this paragraph, 'imminent hazard' means any condition of vehicle, employee, or commercial motor vehicle operations which is likely to result in serious injury or death if not discontinued immediately.

"(6) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or a regulation issued under this title or such Act, shall, upon conviction, be subject for each offense for a fine not to exceed $25,000 or imprisonment for a term not to exceed 1 year, or both, except that, if such violator is an employee, the violator shall only be subject to penalty if, while operating a commercial motor vehicle, the violator's activities have led or could lead to death or serious injury, in which case the violator shall be liable, upon conviction, for a fine not to exceed $2,500.

"(7) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations establishing penalty schedules designed to induce timely compliance for persons failing to comply promptly with the requirements set forth in any notices and orders under this subsection.

"(8) Any aggrieved person who, after a hearing, is adversely affected by a final order issued under this section may, within 30 days, petition for review of the order in the United States court of appeals in the circuit wherein the violation is alleged to have occurred or where the violator has his principal place of business or residence, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Review of the order shall be based on a determination of whether the Secretary's findings and conclusions were supported by substantial evidence, or were otherwise not in accordance with law. No objection that has not been urged before the Secretary shall be considered by the court, unless reasonable grounds existed for failure or neglect to do so. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Secretary.

"(9) All penalties and fines collected under this section shall be deposited into the Highway Trust Fund.

"(10) In any action brought under this section, process may be served without regard to the territorial limits of the district of the State in which the action is brought.

"(11) In any proceeding for criminal contempt for violation of an injunction or restraining order issued under this section, trial shall be by the court, or, upon demand of the accused, by a jury, conducted in accordance with the provisions of rule 42(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(ii) a mechanic;

"(iii) a freight handler; or

"(iv) any individual other than an employer;

who is employed by a commercial motor carrier and who in the course of this employment directly affects commercial motor vehicle safety, but such term does not include an employee of the United States or any State who is acting within the course of such employment;

"(D) 'employer' means any person engaged in a business affecting commerce who owns or leases a commercial motor vehicle in connection with that business, or assigns employees to operate it in commerce, but such term does not include the United States or any State;

"(E) 'person' means one or more individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, business trusts, or any other organized group of individuals; and

"(F) 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, or a political subdivision thereof.

"(13) The provisions of this subsection shall not affect in any way any provision of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act (49 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) or any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under such Act.".

(c) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the effectiveness of the civil and criminal penalties established under this title in deterring violations of the commercial motor vehicle safety regulations issued under this title and in effectively prosecuting such violations when they occur. Such study shall examine the effectiveness of penalties in effect before the date of enactment of this Act in comparison to the penalties established by this title. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this study, together with legislative recommendations, not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

STATE REGULATIONS

SEC. 11. (a) Except as may otherwise be provided in this title or any other Act, all laws, rules, regulations, standards, and orders relating to commercial motor vehicle safety shall be nationally uniform, to the extent practicable. A State may adopt or continue in effect any law, rule, regulation, standard, or order relating to commercial motor vehicle safety, other than hours-of-service regulations applicable to intrastate commerce, until the Secretary has adopted a new rule, regulation, standard, or order, or has continued in effect an existing Federal regulation, regarding the subject matter of such State requirements, pursuant to the provisions of this section.

(b) Within 1 month after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue initial guidelines to assist the States in compiling and submitting materials related to commercial motor vehicle safety laws, rules, regulations, standards, or orders. Within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act, each State shall submit to the Secretary each law, rule, regulation, standard, and order for commercial motor vehicle safety which the State has adopted and has in effect.

(c)(1) A study of the laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders submitted under subsection (b) of this section shall be undertaken by a panel established by the Secretary for that purpose. The Secretary shall be the Chairman of the panel. In addition to the Secretary, the panel shall consist of not more than 15 individuals selected by the Secretary on the basis of their knowledge, expertise or experience regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. The Secretary shall, to the maximum extent possible, ensure that the members of the panel reflect diverse business, consumer and safety interests regarding commercial motor vehicles, as well as State and regional interests. Members of the panel shall receive no compensation, but shall, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, be entitled to reimbursement for travel or transportation expenses incurred in the performance of responsibilities as a member of the panel.

(2) The study required by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall consider the material submitted by States under subsection (b) of this section, and shall identify those laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders for commercial motor vehicle safety which are inconsistent with the objective of national uniformity. In addition, the study shall consider those instances where inconsistency of such laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders is necessary or desirable. The study shall also evaluate the need, if any, for Federal assistance to States to enable States to comply with laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders for commercial motor vehicle safety that are nationally uniform.

(3) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit the results of such study to the Congress, and shall make such results available for public inspection.

(d)(1) Within six months after the completion of the study required by subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary shall commence a rulemaking proceeding to promulgate rules regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. If the Secretary finds on the basis of such study that an existing Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulation better serves the purposes of this title than would a new regulation, the Secretary shall continue such existing regulation in effect. Any rules promulgated under this paragraph shall be based upon such study, and any such rule shall only be promulgated if the Secretary finds that it does not adversely affect any State law, rule, regulation, standard, or order—

(A) for which there is a compelling local safety need;

(B) which is not incompatible with any Federal law, rule, regulation, standard, or order; and

(C) which does not unduly burden interstate commerce.

(2) Any such rule shall be promulgated in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, except that the Secretary shall afford interested persons an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

(e)(1) After the promulgation of any rule under subsection (d) of this section, any State may petition the Secretary for a waiver from application to the State of such rule. The Secretary shall grant such waiver as expeditiously as possible, unless the Secretary finds that—

(A) there is no compelling safety need within such State for such safety rule; or

(B) the grant of such waiver will unduly burden interstate commerce.

(2) The decision to grant or deny a petition for a waiver submitted under this section shall only be made after the Secretary has afforded the relevant State an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

(f)(1) Not later than 60 days after a rule is promulgated under subsection (d) or action is taken regarding a waiver under subsection (e) of this section, any person adversely affected by such rule or action may file with the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia or for the circuit in which such person resides or has his principal place of business a petition for judicial review of such rule or action.

(2) Upon the filing of a petition under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the court shall have jurisdiction to review such rule or action in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, and to grant appropriate relief, including interim relief, as provided in such chapter. Such rule or action shall be affirmed unless the Secretary's findings under subsections (d) and (e) of this section are supported by substantial evidence on the record taken as a whole.

(3) The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such rule or action shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(4) The remedies provided for in this subsection shall be in addition to and not in lieu of any other remedies provided by law.

(g) Nothing in this title shall affect existing hour-of-service regulations of any State applying to commercial motor vehicle operations occurring wholly within that State, unless the Secretary affirmatively finds upon review of a State's hour-of-service regulations that such regulations—

(1) materially diminish commercial motor vehicle safety or the health and safety of employees;

(2) are not required by compelling local conditions; or

(3) unduly burden interstate commerce.

If the Secretary makes such an affirmative determination, the Secretary may require such State to adopt Federal hour-of-service regulations.

(h) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the safety performance of commercial motor vehicles operating in intrastate commerce. This study shall examine the effectiveness of individual State regulations governing such transportation in promoting safety in commercial motor vehicle safety operations. Such study shall also investigate the need to subject such transportation to the Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulations, either in whole or in part. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this investigation and study not later than two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

INSPECTION

SEC. 12. (a) Upon the instruction of a duly authorized State or Federal enforcement official, each commercial motor vehicle shall be required to pass an inspection of all safety equipment required under part 393 of subchapter B of chapter 3 of title 49, Code of Federal Regulations.

(b) The Secretary shall, by rule, establish Federal standards for inspections of commercial motor vehicles no less often than annually, and retention by employers of records of such inspections. Such standards are to be considered minimum Federal standards.

(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed as preventing any State or voluntary group of States from imposing more stringent standards for use in their own periodic roadside inspection programs.

(d) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall initiate a rulemaking to afford interested parties an opportunity to comment on such part 393 and the inspection or retention procedure established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. Amendments to the regulations shall be issued and published in the Federal Register not later than 1 year after such rulemaking is initiated. The amended regulations shall become effective on the date on which they are published in the Federal Register.

(e) A periodic inspection of a commercial motor vehicle in accordance with Federal standards established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be recognized as adequate in every State for the period of such inspection. The provisions of this subsection shall not be deemed to prohibit a State from making random inspections of commercial motor vehicles.

CERTIFICATION OF SAFETY FITNESS

SEC. 13. (a) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall by rule, after notice and opportunity for comment, establish a procedure to determine the safety fitness of commercial motor vehicles, including persons seeking new or additional operating authority as motor carriers of property or passengers under sections 10922 and 10923 of title 49. United States Code such procedure shall include—

(1) specific initial and continuing requirements to be met by such persons to prove safety fitness;

(2) a means of determining whether such persons meet the safety fitness requirements specified under paragraph (1); and

(3) specific time deadlines for action by the Department of Transportation and the Interstate Commerce Commission in making fitness determinations.

(b) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a copy of the procedure established under subsection (a) of this section.

(c) The rules adopted under this section shall supersede all rules in effect on the date of enactment of this Act regarding safety fitness and safety rating of motor carriers.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find any applicant for authority to operate as a motor common or contract carrier to be unfit if the applicant does not meet the safety fitness requirements established under subsection (a) of this section, and shall deny such application.

HEAVY TRUCK RESEARCH

SEC. 14. (a) The Secretary shall undertake a comprehensive study of safety characteristics of heavy trucks, the unique problems related to heavy trucks, and the manner in which such trucks are driven. Such study shall include an examination of the handling, braking, stability, and crashworthiness of heavy trucks, and an examination of the programs and needs of enforcement agencies to assure compliance with traffic laws by commercial motor vehicle drivers. Not later than September 30, 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings of such study.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 such sums as may be necessary to conduct the research required under subsection (a) of this section.

TRUCK OCCUPANT PROTECTION

SEC. 15. (a) The Secretary shall make a full investigation and study of crash protection for truck occupants. Such study shall examine potential and known hazards to truck occupants and means of improving truck-occupant safety. This study shall also include potential performance standards to be met by truck manufacturers. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this investigation and study not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 such sums as may be necessary to undertake the study required by subsection (a) of this section.

STUDY OF SAFETY-RELATED DEVICES

SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the effectiveness of existing regulations regarding emergency warning devices required to be carried on buses, trucks, truck-tractors, and motor-driven vehicles which are involved in emergency situations. Such study shall also investigate the potential costs and benefits of requiring passenger automobile operators to carry emergency warning devices, and shall examine the relative benefits of various types of warning devices in enhancing highway safety. The Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report containing the findings of this study not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(h) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 such sums as may be necessary to undertake the study required by this section.

The study shall include findings regarding the most appropriate method for regulating and protecting the health of operators of commercial motor vehicles. The findings of such study shall be submitted to the Congress within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

PENALTIES

Sec. 09. (a) Section 507 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) The Attorney General, at the request of the Secretary, may bring an action in an appropriate district court of the United States for equitable relief to redress a violation by any person of a provision of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or an order or regulation issued under such section or Act. Such district court shall have jurisdiction to determine any such action and may grant such relief as is necessary or appropriate, including mandatory or prohibitive injunctive relief, interim equitable relief, and punitive damages.".

(b) Section 521(b) of title 49, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) If the Secretary finds that a violation of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or a violation of a regulation issued under such section or such Act, has occurred, the Secretary shall issue a written notice to the violator. Such notice shall describe with reasonable particularity the nature of the violation found and the provision which has been violated. The notice shall fix a reasonable time for abatement of the violation, specify the proposed civil penalty, if any, and suggest actions which might be taken in order to abate the violation. The notice shall indicate that the violator may, within 15 days of service, notify the Secretary of the violator's intention to contest the matter. In the event of a contested notice, the Secretary shall afford such violator an opportunity for a hearing, pursuant to section 554 of title 5, following which the Secretary shall issue an order affirming, modifying, or vacating the notice of violation.

"(2) Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, any person who is determined by the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, to have commited an act which is a violation of recordkeeping requirements issued by the Secretary pursuant to section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984 shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty not to exceed $500 for each offense. Each day of a violation of recordkeeping requirements shall constitute a separate offense, except that the total of all civil penalties assessed against any violator for such violations shall not exceed $2,500. If the Secretary determines that a serious pattern of safety violations, other than recordkeeping requirements, exists or has occurred, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000 for each offense: Provided, however, That the maximum fine for each such pattern of safety violations shall not exceed $10,000. If the Secretary determines that a substantial health or safety violation exists or has occurred which could reasonably lead to, or has resulted in, serious personal injury or death, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each offense: Provided, however, That, except for recordkeeping violations, no civil penalty provided under this section shall be assessed against an employee for a violation of this section unless the Secretary determines that such employee's actions constituted gross negligence or reckless disregard for safety, in which case such employee shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000. The amount of any civil penalty, and a reasonable time for abatement of the violation, shall by written order to be determined by the Secretary, taking into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation committed and, with respect to the violation, the degree of culpability, history of prior offenses, ability to pay, effect on ability to continue to do business, and such other matters as justice and public safety may require. In each case, the assessment shall be calculated to induce further compliance.

"(3) The Secretary may require any violator served with a notice of violation to post a copy of such notice or statement of such notice in such place or places and for such duration as the Secretary may determine appropriate to aid in the enforcement of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984.

"(4) Such civil penalty may be recovered in an action brought by the Attorney General on behalf of the United States in the appropriate district court of the United States or, before referral to the Attorney General, such civil penalty may be compromised by the Secretary.

"(5)(A) If, upon inspection or investigation, the Secretary determines that a violation, or combination of violations, poses an imminent hazard to safety, the Secretary shall order a vehicle or employee operating such vehicle out of service, or order an employer to cease all or part of the employer's commercial motor vehicle operations. In making any such order, the Secretary shall impose no restriction on any employee or employer beyond that required to abate the hazard. Subsequent to the issuance of the order, opportunity for review shall be provided in accordance with section 554 of title 5, except that such review shall occur not later than 10 days after issuance of such order.

"(B) In this paragraph, 'imminent hazard' means any condition of vehicle, employee, or commercial motor vehicle operations which is likely to result in serious injury or death if not discontinued immediately.

"(6) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision of section 3102 of this title or the Motor Carrier Safety Act of 1984, or a regulation issued under this title or such Act, shall, upon conviction, be subject for each offense for a fine not to exceed $25,000 or imprisonment for a term not to exceed 1 year, or both, except that, if such violator is an employee, the violator shall only be subject to penalty if, while operating a commercial motor vehicle, the violator's activities have led or could lead to death or serious injury, in which case the violator shall be liable, upon conviction, for a fine not to exceed $2,500.

"(7) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations establishing penalty schedules designed to induce timely compliance for persons failing to comply promptly with the requirements set forth in any notices and orders under this subsection.

"(8) Any aggrieved person who, after a hearing, is adversely affected by a final order issued under this section may, within 30 days, petition for review of the order in the United States court of appeals in the circuit wherein the violation is alleged to have occurred or where the violator has his principal place of business or residence, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Review of the order shall be based on a determination of whether the Secretary's findings and conclusions were supported by substantial evidence, or were otherwise not in accordance with law. No objection that has not been urged before the Secretary shall be considered by the court, unless reasonable grounds existed for failure or neglect to do so. The commencement of proceedings under this subsection shall not, unless ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the order of the Secretary.

"(9) All penalties and fines collected under this section shall be deposited into the Highway Trust Fund.

"(10) In any action brought under this section, process may be served without regard to the territorial limits of the district of the State in which the action is brought.

"(11) In any proceeding for criminal contempt for violation of an injunction or restraining order issued under this section, trial shall be by the court, or, upon demand of the accused, by a jury, conducted in accordance with the provisions of rule 42(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(12) As used in this subsection, the term—

"(A) 'commerce' means (i) trade, traffic, or transportation within the jurisdiction of the United States between a place in a State and a place outside of such State, or (ii) in the case of a commercial motor vehicle transporting passengers, which affects trade, traffic, or transportation between a place in a State and a place outside of such State;

"(B) 'commercial motor vehicle' means any self-propelled or towed vehicle used on the highways in commerce principally to transport passengers or cargo—

"(i) if such vehicle has a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 or more pounds;

"(ii) if such vehicle is designed to transport more than 15 passengers, including the driver; or

"(iii) if such vehicle is used in the transportation of materials found by the Secretary to be hazardous for the purposes of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act (49 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) and are transported in quantities requiring placarding under regulations issued by the Secretary;

"(ii) a mechanic;

"(iii) a freight handler; or

"(iv) any individual other than an employer; who is employed by a commercial motor carrier and who in the course of this employment directly affects commercial motor vehicle safety, but such term does not include an employee of the United States or any State who is acting within the course of such employment;

"(D) 'employer' means any person engaged in a business affecting commerce who owns or leases a commercial motor vehicle in connection with that business, or assigns employees to operate it in commerce, but such term does not include the United States or any State;

"(E) 'person' means one or more individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, business trusts, or any other organized group of individuals; and

"(F) 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, or a political subdivision thereof.

"(13) The provisions of this subsection shall not affect in any way any provision of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act (49 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) or any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under such Act.".

(c) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the effectiveness of the civil and criminal penalties established under this title in deterring violations of the commercial motor vehicle safety regulations issued under this title and in effectively prosecuting such violations when they occur. Such study shall examine the effectiveness of penalties in effect before the date of enactment of this Act in comparison to the penalties established by this title. Such study shall also investigate the need for, and make recommendations concerning, increased fine levels for civil and criminal penalties, and the need for additional categories of civil and criminal penalties to deter further and prosecute effectively violations of such commercial motor vehicle safety regulations. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this study, together with legislative recommendations, not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

LITIGATION AUTHORITY

SEC. Section 413 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. 2313) is amended by striking "The Secretary, or, on" and inserting in lieu thereof "On".

STATE REGULATIONS

SEC. (a) Except as may otherwise be provided in this title or any other Act, all laws, rules, regulations, standards, and orders relating to commercial motor vehicle safety shall be nationally uniform, to the extent practicable. A State may adopt or continue in effect any law, rule, regulation, standard, or order relating to commercial motor vehicle safety, other than hours-of-service regulations applicable to intrastate commerce, until the Secretary has adopted a new rule, regulation, standard, or order, or has continued in effect an existing Federal regulation, regarding the subject matter of such State requirements, pursuant to the provisions of this section.

(b) Within 1 month after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue initial guidelines to assist the State in compiling and submitting materials related to commercial motor vehicle safety laws, rules, regulations, standards, or orders. Within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act, each State shall submit to the Secretary each law, rule, regulation, standard, and order for commercial motor vehicle safety which the State has adopted and has in effect.

(c)(1) A study of the laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders submitted under subsection (b) of this section shall be undertaken by a panel established by the Secretary for that purpose. The Secretary shall be the Chairman of the panel. In addition to the Secretary, the panel shall consist of not more than 15 individuals selected by the Secretary on the basis of their knowledge, expertise or experience regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. The Secretary shall, to the maximum extent possible, ensure that the members of the panel reflect diverse business, consumer and safety interests regarding commercial motor vehicles, as well as State and regional interests. Members of the panel shall receive no compensation, but shall, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, be entitled to reimbursement for travel or transportation expenses incurred in the performance of responsibilities as a member of the panel.

(2) The study required by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall consider the material submitted by States under subsection (b) of this section, and shall identify those laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders for commercial motor vehicle safety which are inconsistent with the objective of national uniformity. In addition, the study shall consider those instances where inconsistency of such laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders is necessary or desirable. The study shall also evaluate the need, if any, for Federal assistance to States to enable States to comply with laws, rules, regulations, standards and orders for commercial motor vehicle safety that are nationally uniform.

(3) Not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit the results of such study to the Congress, and shall make such results available for public inspection.

(d)(1) Within six months after the completion of the study required by subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary shall commence a rulemaking proceeding to promulgate rules regarding commercial motor vehicle safety. If the Secretary finds on the basis of such study that an existing Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulation better serves the purposes of this title than would a new regulation, the Secretary shall continue such existing regulation in effect. Any rules promulgated under this paragraph shall be based upon such study, and any such rule shall only be promulgated if the Secretary finds that it does not adversely affect any State law, rule, regulation, standards, or order—

(A) for which there is a compelling local safety need;

(B) which is not incompatible with any Federal law, rule, regulation, standard, or order; and

(C) which does not unduly burden interstate commerce.

(2) Any such rule shall be promulgated in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, except that the Secretary shall afford interested persons an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

(e)(1) After the promulgation of any rule under subsection (d) of this section, any State may petition the Secretary for a waiver from application to the State of such rule. The Secretary shall grant such waiver as expeditiously as possible, unless the Secretary finds that—

(A) There is no compelling safety need within such State for such safety rule; or

(B) the grant of such waiver will unduly burden interstate commerce.

(2) The decision to grant or deny a petition for a waiver submitted under this section shall only be made after the Secretary has afforded the relevant State an opportunity for a hearing on the record.

(f)(1) Not later than 60 days after a rule is promulgated under subsection (d) or action is taken regarding a waiver under subsection (e) of this section, any person adversely affected by such rule or action may file with the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia or for the circuit in which such person resides or has his principal place of business a petition for judicial review of such rule or action.

(2) Upon the filing of a petition under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the court shall have jurisdiction to review such rule or action in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, and to grant appropriate relief, including interim relief, as provided in such chapter. Such rule or action shall be affirmed unless the Secretary's findings under subsections (d) and (e) of this section are supported by substantial evidence on the record taken as a whole.

(3) The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such rule or action shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification, as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(4) The remedies provided for in this subsection shall be in addition to and not in lieu of any other remedies provided by law.

(g) Nothing in this title shall affect existing hour-of-service regulations of any State applying to commercial motor vehicle operations occurring wholly within that State, unless the Secretary affirmatively finds upon review of a State's hour-of-service regulations that such regulations—

(1) materially diminish commercial motor vehicle safety or the health and safety of employees;

(2) are not required by compelling local conditions; or

(3) unduly burden interstate commerce.

If the Secretary makes such an affirmative determination, the Secretary may require such State to adopt Federal hour-of-service regulations.

(h) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the safety performance of commercial motor vehicles operating in intrastate commerce. This study shall examine the effectiveness of individual State regulations governing such transportation in promoting safety in commercial motor vehicle safety operations. Such study shall also investigate the need to subject such transportation to the Federal commercial motor vehicle safety regulations, either in whole or in part. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this investigation and study not later than two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

INSPECTION

SEC. (a) Upon the instruction of a duly authorized State or Federal enforcement official, each commercial motor vehicle shall be required to pass an inspection of all safety equipment required under part 393 of subchapter B of chapter 3 of title 49. Code of Federal Regulations.

(b) The Secretary shall by ruled establish Federal standards for inspections of commercial motor vehicles no less often than annually, and retention by employers of records of such inspections. Such standards are to be considered minimum Federal standards.

(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed as preventing any State or voluntary group of States from imposing more stringent standards for use in their own periodic roadside inspection programs.

(d) Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall initiate a rulemaking to afford interested parties an opportunity to comment on such part 393 and the inspection or retention procedure established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. Amendments to the regulations shall be issued and published in the Federal Register not later than 1 year after such rulemaking is initiated. The amended regulations shall become effective on the date on which they are published in the Federal Register.

(e) A periodic inspection of a commercial motor vehicle in accordance with Federal standards established pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be recognized as adequate in every State for the period of such inspection. The provisions of this subsection shall not be deemed to prohibit a State from making random inspections of commercial motor vehicles.

CERTIFICATION OF SAFETY FITNESS

SEC. 13. (a) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall by rule, after notice and opportunity for comment, establish a procedure to determine the safety fitness of commercial motor vehicles, including persons seeking new or additional operating authority as motor carriers of property or passengers under sections 10922 and 10923 of title 49. United States Code. Such procedure shall include—

(1) specific initial and continuing requirements to be met by such persons to prove safety fitness;

(2) a means of determining whether such persons meet the safety fitness requirements specified under paragraph (1); and

(3) specific time deadlines for action by the Department of Transportation and the Interstate Commerce Commission in making fitness determinations.

(b) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a copy of the procedure established under subsection (a) of this section.

(c) The rules adopted under this section shall supersede all rules in effect on the date of enactment of this Act regarding safety fitness and safety rating of motor carriers.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find any applicant for authority to operate as a motor common or contract carrier to be unfit if the applicant does not meet the safety fitness requirements established under subsection (a) of this section, and shall deny such application.

HEAVY TRUCK RESEARCH

SEC. 14. (a) The Secretary shall undertake a comprehensive study of safety characteristics of heavy trucks, the unique problems related to heavy trucks, and the manner in which such trucks are driven. Such study shall include an examination of the handling, braking, stability, and crash-worthiness of heavy trucks, and an examination of the programs and needs of enforcement agencies to assure compliance with traffic laws by commercial motor vehicle drivers. Not later than September 30, 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings of such study.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and 1986 such sums as may be necessary to conduct the research required under subsection (a) of this section.

TRUCK OCCUPANT PROTECTION

SEC. 15. The Secretary shall make a full investigation and study of crash protection for truck occupants. Such study shall examine potential and known hazards to truck occupants and means of improving truck-occupant safety. This study shall also include potential performance standards to be met by truck manufacturers. The Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of this investigation and study not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

(h) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 such sums as may be necessary to undertake the study required by subsection (a) of this section.

STUDY OF SAFETY-RELATED DEVICES

SEC. 16. (a) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the effectiveness of existing regulations regarding emergency warning devices required to be carried on buses, trucks, truck-tractors, and motor-driven vehicles which are involved in emergency situations. Such study shall also investigate the potential costs and benefits of requiring passenger automobile operators to carry emergency warning devices, and shall examine the relative benefits of various types of warning devices in enhancing highway safety. The Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report containing the findings of this study not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 such sums as may be necessary to undertake the study required by this section.

OVERSIGHT

SEC. 17. The appropriate authorizing Committees of the Congress shall conduct periodic oversight hearings on the effects of this title no less often than annually for the first 3 years following the date of enactment of this Act, to insure that this title is being implemented according to congressional intent and the purposes of this title.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 18. The provisions of this title shall not affect in any way any provision of the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act (49 U.S.C. 1801 et seq.) or any regulation promulgated by the Secretary under such Act.

AMENDMENT TO MOTOR CARRIER ACT OF 1980

SEC. 19. Section 30(b)(3) of the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-296; 94 Stat. 821) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" immediately before "(B)"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and (C) in the case of any agricultural vehicle transporting any such material or substance in interstate commerce other than in bulk, the Secretary, by regulation, may reduce such amount if the Secretary finds that such reduction will not adversely affect public safety".

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2) and (3) as paragraphs (2), (3) and (4), respectively; and

(2) by inserting immediately before paragraph (1), as so redesignated, the following new paragraph:

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 2. (a) For fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987, any revenues raised by legislation enacted on or after March 15, 1984, shall only be used to reduce the Federal budget deficits for such fiscal years except to the extent that such legislation earmarks all or any part of such revenues for specific spending programs.

(b) For fiscal years, 1985, 1986, and 1987, increased funding would be appropriate if authorizations are enacted for education programs, environmental protection, health research activities, and such specific low-income programs as employment initiatives for disadvantaged youth, public works, jobs for community renewal, increased funding for Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the state component of the Supplemental Security Income program in order to ensure that the purchasing power of recipients is maintained, increased funding for Title XX of the Social Security Act, and an increase in the earned income tax credit, pursuant to subsection (a) above, if sufficient outlay reductions or new revenues are also enacted to ensure that the legislation is deficit neutral.

ADMINISTRATIVE SAVINGS

SEC. 3. It is the sense of the Congress that the executive branch shall achieve as much of the $153.2 billion in savings as is feasible, but in no case less than $2.0 billion over fiscal years 1985 through 1987 which have been recommended by the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control and which can be achieved through administrative action within that branch of Government. It is further the sense of the Congress that the President should report to Congress each year, in conjunction with the annual budget submission, on the progress made in achieving the savings required by this section, and that the budget submission for fiscal year 1986 should contain information regarding such administrative savings as have already been achieved.

AUTOMATIC SECOND BUDGET RESOLUTION

SEC. 4. (a) Effective October 1, 1984, this concurrent resolution shall be deemed to be the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985 required to be reported under section 310(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, for the purposes of the prohibitions contained in section 311 of such Act.

(b) Section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as made applicable by subsection (a) of this section, shall not apply to bills, resolutions, or amendments within the jurisdiction of a committee, or any conference report on any such bill or resolution, if—

(1) the enactment of such bill or resolution as reported;

(2) the adoption and enactment of such amendment; or

(3) the enactment of such bill or resolution in the form recommended in such conference report; would not cause the appropriate allocation for such committee of new discretionary budget authority or new spending authority as described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 made pursuant to section 302(a) of such Act for fiscal year 1985 to be exceeded.

(c) The provisions of this section shall cease to apply when Congress completes action on a subsequent concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985 pursuant to section 304 or 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

SECTION 302(b) FILING REQUIREMENT

SEC. 5. (a) It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider any bill or resolution, or amendment thereto, providing—

(1) new budget authority for fiscal year 1985;

(2) new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act first effective in fiscal year 1985; or

(3) direct loan authority, primary loan guarantee authority, or secondary loan guarantee authority for fiscal year 1985;

within the jurisdiction of any committee which has received an allocation pursuant to section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of discretionary budget authority or new spending authority, as described above, for such fiscal year, unless and until such committee makes the allocation or subdivisions required by section 302(b) of the Congressional Budget Act, in connection with the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget.

(b) The prohibition contained in subsection (a) shall not apply until twenty-one days of continuous session, as defined in section 1011(5) of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, after Congress completes action on this concurrent resolution.

CLEAN WATER ACT AUTHORIZATION

LAUTENBERG (AND BRADLEY) AMENDMENT NO. 4846

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself and Mr. BRADLEY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 431) to amend the Clean Water Act, as amended, to authorize funds for fiscal years 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 56, after line 5, insert the following new section:

LIMITATION ON DISCHARGE OF RAW SEWAGE BY NEW YORK CITY

SEC. 20. (a)(1) If the wastewater treatment plant identified in the consent decree as the North River plant has not achieved advanced preliminary treatment as required under the terms of the consent decree by August 1, 1986, the city of New York shall not discharge raw sewage from the drainage area of such plant (as defined in the consent decree) into navigable waters after such date in an amount which is greater for any 30-day period than an amount equal to 30 times the average daily amount of raw sewage discharged from such drainage area during the 12-month period ending on the earlier of the date on which such plant becomes operational or March 15, 1986 (as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), except as provided in subsection (b).

(2) If the wastewater treatment plant identified in the consent decree as the Red Hook plant has not achieved advanced preliminary treatment as required under the terms of the consent decree by August 1, 1987, the city of New York shall not discharge raw sewage from the drainage area of such plant (as defined in the consent decree) into navigable waters after such date in an amount which is greater for any 30-day period than an amount equal to 30 times the average daily amount of raw sewage discharged from such drainage area during the 12-month period ending on the earlier of the date on which such plant becomes operational or March 15, 1987 (as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), except as provided in subsection (b).

(b)(1) In the event of any significant interruption in the operation of the North River plant or the Red Hook plant caused by an event described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (5) occurring after the applicable deadline established under subsection (a), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a) with respect to such plant, but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as may be reasonably necessary for the city of New York to resume operation of such plant.

(2) In the event that the volume of precipitation occurring after the applicable deadline established under subsection (a) causes the discharge of raw sewage to exceed the limitation under subsection (a), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a) with respect to either or both such plants, but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be necessary to take into account the increased discharged caused by such volume of precipitation.

(3) In the event that an increase in discharges from the North River drainage area constituting a violation of subsection (a)(1) is due to a random or seasonal variation, and that any sewer hookup occurring, or permit for a sewer hookup granted, after July 31, 1986, is not responsible for such violation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a)(1), but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be reasonably necessary to take into account such random or seasonal variation.

(4) In the event that an increase in discharges from the Red Hook drainage area constituting a violation of subsection (a)(2) is due to a random or seasonal variation, and that any sewer hookup occurring, or permit for a sewer hookup granted, after July 31, 1987, is not responsible for such violation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a)(2), but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be reasonably necessary to take into account such random or seasonal variation.

(5) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall extend either deadline under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) to such extent and for such limited period of time as may be reasonably required to take into account any—

(A) act of war,

(B) unanticipated grave natural disaster or other natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, the effects of which could not have been prevented or avoided by the exercise of due care or foresight, or

(C) other circumstances beyond the control of the city of New York, such circumstances not to include (i) the unavailability of Federal funds under section 201 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, (ii) the unavailability of funds from the city of New York or the State of New York, or (iii) a policy decision made by the city of New York or the State of New York to delay the achievement of advanced preliminary treatment at the North River plant or Red Hook plant beyond the applicable deadline in subsection (a).

(c) Except as otherwide provided in subsection (b), any violation of subsection (a) shall be considered to be a violation of section 301 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, and all provisions of such Act relating to violations of such section 301 shall apply.

(d) For purposes of this section, the "consent decree" is the consent decree entered into by the Environmental Protection Agency, the city of New York, and the State of New York, on December 30, 1982, relating to construction and operation of the North River and Red Hook wastewater treatment plants.

(e) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall work with the city of New York to eliminate the discharge of raw sewage by such city at the earliest practicable date.

(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying the terms of the consent decree.

(g) It is the sense of the Congress that the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should not agree to any further modification of the consent decree with respect to the schedule for achieving advanced preliminary treatment.

(h)(1) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect with respect to the North River drainage area until such time as the North River plant has achieved advanced preliminary treatment (as defined in the consent decree) for a period of six consecutive months.

(2) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect with respect to the Red Hook drainage area until such time as the Red Hook plant has achieved advanced preliminary treatment (as defined in the consent decree) for a period of six consecutive months.

(i) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish and carry out a program within available funds to implement the monitoring activities which may be required under subsection (a) by December 1, 1984. The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish the methodologies, data base, and any other information required for making determinations under subsection (b) for the North River drainage area (as defined in the consent decree) by July 31, 1986, unless the requirements of subsection (h)(1) have been satisfied, and for the Red Hook drainage area (as defined by the consent decree) by July 31, 1987, unless the requirements of subsection (h)(2) have been satisfied. In carrying out such program, if the Administrator finds that a violation of subsection (a) has occurred, the Administrator shall also determine, within 30 days after such finding, whether a provision of subsection (b) applies. If the Administrator requires information from the city of New York in order to determine whether a provision of subsection (b) applies, the Administrator shall request such information. If the city of New York does not supply the information requested by the Administrator, the Administrator shall determine that subsection (b) does not apply. The city of New York shall be responsible only for such expenses as are necessary to provide such requested information. Enforcement action pursuant to subsection (c) shall be commenced at the end of such 30 days unless a provision of subsection (b) applies.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, when the Senate considers S. 431, the Clear Water Act Amendments of 1983, I intend to offer an amendment, for myself and Senator BRADLEY, to address a regional water quality problem that has plagued New Jersey for decades. I refer to the unconscionable practice, by the city of New York, of dumping hundreds of millions of gallons of raw sewage a day into the Hudson-Raritan Estuary, which washes New Jersey's shores.

Today the city of New York is dumping approximately 230 million gallons of raw sewage a day into the Hudson and East Rivers. This practice has gone on for decades, Mr. President, unabated by legal action by the Interstate Sanitary Commission, a tri-State body with environmental responsibilities for the New Jersey, New York, and Connecticut area, entreaties and enforcement actions by the Environmental Protection Agency; and two court-ordered deadlines to cease this practice which have long passed.

New York City is the only major municipality in the country which still does not provide at least preliminary treatment of its wastes. In fact, the city of New York is responsible for dumping over two-thirds of the raw sewage discharged in the entire Nation. It does so because of the absence of sewage treatment plants in two major drainage areas in New York City, encompassing parts of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

The city of New York is now building the North River and Red Hook sewage treatment plants to treat these wastes under court-ordered deadlines. By August 1, 1986, it is supposed to have the North River plant on line to treat up to 170 million gallons of sewage and wastes a day. By August 1, 1987, it is supposed to have the Red Hook treatment plant on line to treat 60 million gallons a day of waste. By those dates, the respective plants are required to achieve advanced preliminary treatment. They are not required to provide secondary treatment until 1991 and 1989 respectively.

These deadlines are dictated by a consent decree signed by the city of New York in December 1982. This decree is the third such consent decree that the city of New York has entered into with respect to these facilities. The first was signed in 1977; the second in 1979. Both of these decrees were renegotiated to extend the city's deadline for complying with the Clean Water Act. No fines or penalties were ever levied against the city for failure to comply with earlier court-ordered deadlines. In each case, EPA simply extended New York's deadlines.

Mr. President, these consent decrees have been negotiated by a small number of parties—the city, the State of New York, the EPA, and a district court judge—none of whom are accountable directly to the public. In essence, they have served as a legal cover for the city. This cozy arrangement has resulted in special treatment for the city of New York under the Clean Water Act. It has contributed to continued degradation of regional waters.

As a result of these arrangements, legal action initiated by the Interstate Sanitary Commission decades ago has not resulted in the abatement of raw sewage dumping by the city. If New York complies with the deadlines in its current consent decree, it will not even begin to provide secondary treatment for the wastes for these drainage areas until 5 years after it was required to do so by its first consent decree.

Mr. President, my amendment is guided by a simple aphorism drawn from the sports world: three strikes and you're out.

Simply stated, the amendment will impose a cap on raw sewage discharges from the drainage areas in the city of New York currently without treatment plants if the city fails to meet the deadlines for achieving advanced preliminary treatment contained in its current consent decree. These deadlines are August 1, 1986, for the North River plant in Manhattan and August 1, 1987, for the Red Hook plant in Brooklyn.

If these deadlines are met, the cap will be unnecessary because all raw sewage discharges will cease. If the city fails to meet these deadlines, a cap will be imposed in the drainage area in violation of the decree. It will stay in effect until the city brings the affected plant online and it operates successfully for 6 months.

The cap imposed by this amendment will be based on the annual average daily discharge of raw sewage between March 15, 1985, and March 15, 1986, for the North River drainage area, and March 15, 1986, and March 15, 1987, in the Red Hook drainage area, or the 12 months preceding operation of the plants, whichever, is earlier. If the city misses its consent decree deadlines, it will be in violation of this amendment if it discharges, in any 30-day period, more raw sewage than the annual daily average discharged during the applicable baseline year.

Mr. President, this amendment combines the use of the carrot and the stick.

It provides a strong incentive for the city to have both of these plants online as soon as possible. It directs the EPA to work with the city to end raw sewage discharges at the earliest possible date.

If New York City does not meet its deadlines, the amendment provides for tough penalties unless the city is prevented from complying by circumstances beyond its control.

The imposition of a cap on raw sewage discharges, upon a violation of the consent decree, in effect says to the city of New York, "You cannot continue to grow without restraint if you cannot treat your wastes."

Upon violation of the cap, the city would be subject to the enforcement provisions in section 309 of the Clean Water Act. These penalties would be in addition to those provided for for violation of the consent decree. They include tough civil and criminal penalties, and would enable EPA to seek a temporary or permanent injunction against the city, to bring civil actions against the city, and to initiate criminal prosecution in cases of negligence or falsification of records.

With the changes S. 431 makes to section 309 of the Clean Water Act, a violation of the cap imposed by this amendment could result in substantial penalties of up to $50,000 a day. A violation stemming from a criminal conviction could lead to imprisonment.

Finally, Mr. President, the amendment states that it is the sense of the Congress that EPA should not extend the deadlines in the city's existing consent decree any further.

Mr. President, this amendment has been very carefully crafted to take account of so-called acts of God, and other circumstances which are beyond the city's control. Thousands of cities around this Nation, large and small, with far fewer resources than the city of New York, have struggled to comply with the Clean Water Act. Not one other major city in the country is discharging raw sewage into waterways. Only three other States even have discharges of raw sewage exceeding 10 million gallons a day.

New Jersey has had its share of water quality problems. But not one New Jersey municipality is discharging raw sewage. Treatment plants in northern New Jersey are all achieving advanced preliminary treatment, and the major plants serving this area are achieving secondary treatment.

The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection has imposed approximately 50 sewer hookup bans in New Jersey, currently affecting about 75 communities, to improve compliance with the Clean Water Act. Several communities may finance the upgrading of their sewage treatment plants to secondary treatment without any Federal or State aid. In some cases, the Department of Environmental Protection in New Jersey is requiring private sector parties to contribute to local efforts to upgrade sewage treatment facilities as the price of securing a sewer hookup permit and proceeding with planned development.

Mr. President, I regret the regional tension that has arisen over this issue. New Jersey and New York do not need to grow at each other's expense. Regional growth is good for both States.

By the same token, Mr. President, this growth should be accompanied by appropriate environmental protection. It must not come at the expense of the environment. It must not come at the expense of New Jersey's tourist and commercial and recreational fishing industries.

Should New York continue past environmental practices, New Jersey would be the loser twice. It would suffer from a competitive disadvantage, by following a clean growth strategy while New York City pursued growth unlimited by environmental concerns.

It would also suffer as the continued recipient of New York's pollution.

The amendment will provide strong incentives for New York City to comply with its consent decree without unfairly penalizing the city.

Mr. President, with this dispute behind us, I hope S. 431 will be scheduled for floor action promptly. Only a handful of days remain before the Congress adjourns until next year. I was very disappointed that the majority leader did not schedule this bill for consideration last week. I hope the Senate will find time to consider it this week.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two letters Senator BRADLEY and I have sent to the majority leader urging Senate action on S. 431, and several editorials and articles from New Jersey publications be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, DC, August 10, 1984.

Hon. HOWARD H. BAKER, Jr.,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR HOWARD: We are writing to urge you to schedule action on S. 431, the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1983, as soon as possible after we reconvened on September 5.

As you know, this bill has been held up largely at the request of the Senators from New York. Over the past three weeks we have engaged in intensive negotiations with Senators Moynihan and D'Amato to facilitate consideration of this bill. Unfortunately, the Senators from New York continued to resist scheduling action on this bill before we recessed.

We are prepared to continue negotiations with all affected parties to facilitate prompt action on S. 431. The improvements to the Clean Water Act included in S. 431 and its companion House bill, H.R. 3282, are of vital importance to our state and the country. This measure is a top environmental priority before the Congress and should be considered quickly, so that a conference can be concluded, and the measure approved, before we adjourn in October.

When S. 431 is scheduled for action, we intend to offer an amendment dealing with water quality in the New York-New Jersey region. Should a time agreement be in order at that time, we request that we be consulted before any agreement is entered into so that a limited amount of time can be provided for our amendment.

Thank you for your consideration of this matter.

Sincerely,

BILL BRADLEY.
FRANK R. LAUTENBERG.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, September 19, 1984.

Hon. HOWARD H. BAKER, Jr.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR HOWARD: We are writing to follow-up on our letter of August 10, 1984 to once again urge you to schedule timely action on S. 431, the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1983.

The Senate Environment and Public Works Committee reported S. 431 to the full Senate for consideration on September 21, 1983 by a unanimous vote of 14-0. The House of Representatives approved a companion measure, H.R. 3282, by an overwhelming vote of 405-11, on June 26, 1984. Both measures contain critical provisions which can result in an improvement in our national water quality programs and in our environment. Recently, twenty-six groups representing a broad spectrum of the business, labor and environmental communities wrote to every Member of the Senate urging prompt consideration of S. 431.

After intense discussions with officials from the City of New York and Senators D'Amato and Moynihan, we have crafted an amendment that takes into consideration all concerns raised with us by these parties. We consider our amendment an equitable solution to severe water quality problems in our region. We need only a limited amount of time for consideration of our amendment. We hope you can schedule floor action on S. 431 shortly so that a conference can be concluded, and a measure enacted, before adjournment.

The Clean Water Act Amendments of 1983 are a top environmental priority of the 98th Congress. If conferees are to have a chance to meet on this measure, it is imperative that this bill be scheduled immediately.

Sincerely,

BILL BRADLEY.
FRANK R. LAUTENBERG.

[From the Newark [NJ] Star Ledger, Sept. 26, 1984]

A REASONABLE SOLUTION

The Senate amendment to the Clean Water Act designed to prevent continued dumping of raw sewage by New York City into the Hudson and East rivers has been dubbed a compromise, but the measure is, nevertheless, strong enough to make New York stick to its promise to clean up its act.

The advantage of the amendment is that it will allow the Senate to take up the Clean Water Act the broader legislation that includes the prohibition against New York dumping Prior to the compromise New York's two Senators—Democrat Daniel Moynihan and Republican Alfonse D'Amato—threatened to seek to block the Clean Water Act through delaying filibuster tactics.

Rep. James Howard the New Jersey Democrat who led the fight against New York dumping voiced satisfaction with the compromise stating: "With this amendment New York will no longer be able to seek waivers from the Federal courts to allow continued pollution."

This is the major consideration. New York City has been the principal polluter in the metropolitan area for many years now and New Jersey has been the principal victim of the city's thoughtless and illegal action in dumping raw sewage into the waters. Marine life and beaches in New Jersey have been severely contaminated by the practice. The legislation should put a stop to this.

Under it, New York City would face criminal penalties, fines and a construction ban if it fails to get two sewage treatment plants into operation on schedule. The court-imposed deadline is Aug. 1, 1986 for one plant and a year later for the other.

The House version of the measure was even tougher but perhaps less realistic. It would have placed a cap on the amount of sewage the city could dump into the rivers on March 15, 1986, regardless of the completion of the treatment plants.

The Senate version should do the trick. It is, however, up to the Federal Government to make sure that once passed, the legislation is strictly enforced.

[From the Bergen Record, Sept. 6, 1984]

WHAT'S NEW YORK AFRAID OF

New York's congressional delegation doth protest too much. "Mean-spirited, petty, mean, nasty" that's the way Sen. Alfonse D'Amato is characterizing an amendment to the Clean Water Act that would penalize New York City for continuing to dump raw sewage into the Hudson River.

We don't agree. The amendment in question, sponsored by Rep. James Howard of New Jersey, would merely make New York City adhere to a court-ordered deadline for completion of treatment plants to end the dumping, which is fouling New Jersey's beaches and ruining its fishing industry. It is simply common-sense insurance for New Jersey. How long can the state be expected to tolerate daily waste discharges that would cover the playing field at Giants Stadium with 67 feet of sewage?

New York City's record in this area is none too savory. The city has been planning the two sewage plants—at 137th Street in Manhattan and at Red Hook in Brooklyn—since the late Sixties. Delay followed delay. When construction finally started, completion dates were pushed forward at least twice. Now, nearly 20 years later, the noxious stuff is still spewing into the Hudson. Given this record, why should New Jersey trust the city to comply with a 1986 dumping deadline?

The Howard amendment, adopted by the House in June, would place a cap on raw-sewage discharges into the Hudson after the 1986 deadline. If the city exceeded the limit, it couldn't permit construction of any new buildings with sewer hookups. The Clean Water Act awaits action in the Senate, and Senators Bill Bradley and Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey are seeking similar guarantees. Now Senator D'Amato is threatening to filibuster if the Howard amendment is incorporated into the Senate bill.

Why all the fuss? If the city truly intends to comply with court-ordered deadlines, as its spokesmen say it does, and the sewage-treatment plants go into operation late next year, as they are supposed to the Howard amendment won't stop a single building. What's New York afraid of? If the answer is that it doesn't think it can meet this long-overdue 1986 deadline, we're glad the New Jersey congressmen are standing guard to make sure that it does.

[From the Shrewsbury Register, Mar. 7, 1984]

NEW YORK PLAYS DIRTY

"Flush and forget." That apt phrase, coined by New Jersey's junior senator, Frank Lautenberg, succinctly sums up New York City's bad neighbor policy of pushing ahead with large-scale building and dumping its raw sewage on us.

The city, which has been flushing its toilets on our beaches for years, will be sending even more raw sewage our way if its new convention center opens on schedule next year. It already is pouring 220 million gallons of raw sewage into the Hudson River, the East River and New York Harbor every day, untreated human waste which washes up on our beaches. The new convention center, the $2 billion Battery Park City, every new skyscraping office building that brings New York more tax ratables brings more pollution to us.

How does New York get away with it? Where is the Federal Environmental Protection Agency, which supposedly is watchdogging the Clean Water Agency, which supposedly is watchdogging the Clean Water Act?

The EPA apparently operates on a double standard. While it forced towns on the New Jersey side of the Hudson to stop development until they provided adequate sewage treatment facilities, it has permitted New York to proceed with massive development. And, while New Jersey has struggled to conform with the Clean Water Act, New York has been granted exemptions from it.

Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., is scheduling public hearings this spring by the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, which he heads to determine whether the EPA has been enforcing the Clean Water Act even-handedly, or has been giving New York City favored treatment. And Lautenberg has said he will ask the Senate Environmental and Public Works Committee, on which he serves, to conduct hearings on that question, too.

Monmouth County officials at every level—our representatives in the state Legislature, freeholders, members of municipal governing bodies—have been fighting for years to stop New York's "build and pollute" policies. Four years ago, Assemblyman Anthony M. Villane Jr., R-Monmouth, a leader in that fight, charged that the EPA was advocating "deliberate destruction of New Jersey's beaches" when it approved construction of the Manhattan convention center. "It's the same old story," Villane commented at that time, "New York gets the development, the tax ratables and economic boost, while New Jersey gets the poison."

In an effort to give a new ending to that "same old story," Rep. Matthew J. Rinaldo, R-N.J., has called on the EPA to order the opening of the convention center delayed until completion of the pipeline hooking it into a new treatment plant, a hook-up scheduled to go into operation in the summer of 1986. That wouldn't do anything to stop the befouling of our beaches, but it would get the message across to city officials: New Jersey isn't New York's cesspool.

We're not trying to hamper New York's economic development. But New Jersey's economy is at stake: our $7 billion-a-year tourist industry is threatened. There is need for determined federal action to ban any further major construction in New York until the city cleans up its act.

NEVER TOO LATE

The time for all the fine intellectual doubletalk has passed. The time for putting your money where your mouth is will soon be arriving. That, in substance, was the message that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) gave to New York City about the large quantities of raw sewage that New York pumps daily into surrounding waterways.

William Ruckelshaus, the EPA administrator, said the federal agency is prepared to "hold the city's feet to the fire" to make sure it meets its deadline of completing two big wastewater plants by 1986-1987. The form the federal hotfoot will take will be fines of up to $25,000 a day for non-compliance. As a politician once said in another context: That adds up to real money after a while.

Mr. Ruckelshaus is to be commended for his rectitude in forcing New York to clean up its act. Its pollution has caused enormous problems for the entire metropolitan area for decades. What was sometimes more upsetting than the pollution it caused was the city's attitude towards its misdeeds.

This consisted for the most part of vehement denial. Such denials frequently consisted of two contradictory parts. One part was New York's contention that there wasn't any pollution on its part. The other was a claim that it was rapidly being abated. Add to this an equal part of arrogance in which it regularly lectured New Jersey on its responsibilities and you had what came close to a new high in bureaucratic obnoxiousness.

The situation should be greatly improved when the two New York treatment plants are on line. The new stern line from the top at EPA, which affirms that, barring an "act of God," the plants will run on schedule or New York will pay until it hurts, ought to do the job.

In fact, New York has changed its tune about getting the plants built on time. It is not only going to do it; it is going to like doing it. "New York City is no longer objecting to going to full secondary treatment," said Mr. Ruckelshaus. "This city has changed its position on this issue."

To this late conversion, there are only two appropriate comments. One is: "Congratulations!" The other is: "Better late than never."

POLLUTION HAZARD

The investigation of New York City's massive discharges of raw sewage into metropolitan waterways has given an overdue needed impetus to begin resolving what has become the nation's worst sewage and sludge problem. This is a refreshing change of official attitude, further fortified by recent pledges by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) for "strict enforcement" of federal clean water regulations.

A ranking EPA regional official, Dr. Richard Dewling, said the federal agency is giving a priority status to funding for sewage treatment plant upgrading in crucial urban areas in New Jersey and New York. This belated governmental action is a direct response to an ongoing congressional inquiry.

Two New Jersey congressional Democrats—Sen. Frank Lautenberg, a member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, and Rep. James J. Howard, chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee—are scheduling hearings on New York City's blatant violations of the 1972 Clean Water Act.

The congressmen want to know why New York City has been permitted to discharge more than 220 million gallons a day of raw, untreated sewage directly into the Hudson and East Rivers since 1972 when the Clean Water Act became law.

The regional EPA director, Jacqueline Schafer, denied reports that the agency has given New York City preferential treatment by permitting the discharge. She said the EPA is "going to enforce and implement the Clean Water Act on both sides of the Hudson." That's the most encouraging development to date for New Jersey in this ongoing pollution controversy.

If that commitment is vigorously enforced, it would constitute a responsible administrative action in eliminating what Sen. Lautenberg and Rep. Howard have criticized as a "double standard" that gives New York the right to build and pollute, while New Jersey must control growth and check pollution with expensive sewage treatment plants.

There are no operating treatment plants in Manhattan, yet New Jersey's largest sewer plants are operating on a secondary treatment, the highest treatment for urban wastewater. New York City has erected billions of dollars worth of high-rises during the past dozen years, resulting in a ceaseless flow of filth into the rivers and coastal waters along the Jersey Shore and Long Island.

The congressional probe underscores a compelling sense of urgency for a broad coalition of federal, state and local governments to begin addressing this enormous pollution problem by finally completing pollution control programs that began two decades ago.

As a potent initial phase, the EPA should mandate New York, the principal source of widespread contamination of regional waterways, to complete its pollution control facilities before further significant development proceeds.

[From the Newark Star Ledger, May 15, 1984]

RAW DEAL

Strange things are happening on the other side of the Hudson River. New York's two U.S. senators have joined forces and are doing their fighting best to keep Congress from passing legislation that would limit the amount of raw sewage that New York City can dump.

At a joint press conference, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, a Republican, and Sen. Daniel Moynihan, a Democrat, castigated Rep. James Howard of New Jersey, chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, for proposing an amendment to the Clean Water Act that would prohibit the nation's largest city from dumping more raw sewage into the Hudson and East rivers than it is now doing.

One could reach two conclusions from the D'Amato-Moynihan opposition. First, that only a little bit of sewage is involved. Second, that New Yorkers enjoy wallowing in the filth they flush into the rivers. Neither has any validity.

What is involved is 220 million gallons of pollution each and every day. That's an awful lot of awful stuff that no one in his right mind would want to live with.

Congressman Howard points out, moreover, that his amendment will cause the city no trouble if it maintains its schedule and completes construction of its sewage treatment plants by the 1986 target date. As passed by Mr. Howard's committee, despite New York's opposition, the measure's restrictions would not become operative until March 15, 1986.

Sen. Moynihan called the legislation "absurd and destructive and vindictive." Sen. D'Amato accused Rep. Howard of publicity-seeking, saying the amendment's provisions would "read well in The Star-Ledger," indicating that he had read this newspaper's detailed series of articles on New York's wanton dumping of sewage.

Are Sens. D'Amato and Moynihan engaged in a Tweedledum-Tweedledee act to protect the right of New Yorkers to live in filth? Or are they simply reacting in their pique—with perhaps a pinch of envy—to New Jersey's successes in attracting new business and industry?

New York's senators should be reminded that raw sewage is not an asset, that pollution is a health hazard and that the rivers must be cleaned up. They should keep in mind that New York has been less than diligent in honoring court-imposed deadlines, fiddle-faddling year after year and seeking one delay after another.

Most important, both sides of the Hudson—New York City and North Jersey—form a single metropolitan region with common economic interests. United they prosper, divided they fall.

CLEAN WATER INACTION BLAMED ON NEW YORK

(By J. Scott Orr and Stanley E. Terrell)

WASHINGTON.—New Jersey's Democratic Sens. Bill Bradley and Frank Lautenberg yesterday blamed the Senate's failure to take up the Clean Water Act on New York's senators, who are blocking floor action because of a provision in the House version that would limit the discharge of raw sewage into the Hudson and East rivers.

Bradley and Lautenberg called the Senate's failure to take up the House-passed bill a "disgrace" and expressed frustration at their inability to reach a compromise with the New York delegation.

They said three weeks of negotiations in an attempt to clear the roadblocks failed as Sens. Alfonse D'Amato (R-N.Y.) and Daniel P. Moynihan (D-N.Y.) refused to lift their hold on the bill.

Congress adjourned yesterday for a three-week recess for the Republican National Convention, and the Senate calendar already is packed for the remainder of the session.

"We made a good faith effort to work this out by addressing concerns of the City of New York," Bradley and Lautenberg said in a joint statement.

"It is incumbent upon all of the parties in the region to solve this dispute and get on with the business of protecting our national environment."

Bradley, in an interview, said the efforts to date have included a number of compromises which he refuse to discuss. He said, however, that no changes in the language of the provision are in the works.

Lautenberg and Bradley penned separate letters to Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker yesterday seeking speedy Senate consideration of the bill when Congress returns in September.

They vowed to "continue to work with the senators from New York to achieve a mutually satisfactory consensus on this critical issue."

D'Amato and Moynihan are blocking the measure because of a provision inserted in the House version of the Clean Water Act reauthorization by Rep. James Howard (D-3d Dist.)

The provision would cap the amount of raw sewage New York may dump into the Hudson and East rivers after March 1986. The city already is under court order to build two sewage treatment plants and officials estimate that the plants will be on line prior to the deadline.

D'Amato, Moynihan and other New York officials have admitted the city will have not trouble in meeting the deadline, but have argued that its existence could discourage developers from launching construction projects in the Empire City.

The bill, which passed the House by an overwhelming margin of 405-11, has the full backing of New Jersey's congressional delegation. The issue has been a thorn in the side of New Jersey legislators for decades.

In April U.S. District Court Judge Herbert J. Stern in Newark said he would order the shutdown of one of New York's largest landfill operations unless the flow of medical debris from the site was stopped immediately.

At the time, Stern said he was "outraged" that the debris—which included hospital garbage ranging from used hypodermic needles to samples of human wastes—was washing up on New Jersey's beaches, contending the situation created "an overwhelming health hazard."

Stern ordered New York to stop the dumping of hospital waste into the Fresh Kills landfill on Staten' Island, and further ordered the city to enclose the landfill by Dec. 31, 1985, to prevent waste from leaving the landfill and falling into the waters of the Arthur Kill, which empty into Raritan Bay.

The Fresh Kills landfill is the largest landfill in the New York area and takes in more than 11,000 tons of garbage a day. New York officials claim that the shutdown of the facility would leave half of the garbage in Manhattan on the streets and would create a major health crisis in the city.

Stern directed New York officials to provide him with periodic reports of the progress to enclose the landfill, asserting that if it failed to comply with the 1985 deadline, "it will show a reckless indifference" for the health of the people of New Jersey and he will order the landfill shut.

The judge said it would be impossible to entirely halt the flow of all garbage from the site without closing the facility, and stressed that the 1985 deadline is New York's last chance to bring the situation under control.

"We have been sacrificing the interest of thousands to the interest of millions, but it simply cannot go on forever," Stern declared at the time. He directed New York to continue to pay full cleanup costs for removing the pollution from the beaches.

The federal judge's ruling came on a request from Woodbridge, which is across the Arthur Kill from the Staten Island landfill. The township told Stern debris from the landfill had been washing up on the shores of the Port Reading section of Woodbridge since the end of the last decade.

Two months after Stern issued the order, however, officials said the waste was still being washed ashore on beaches in two Monmouth County communities along Raritan Bay.

NEW JERSEY SENATORS VOW TO STOP NEW YORK DUMPING

WASHINGTON.—New Jersey senators, saying they could not resolve disagreements with New York senators, vowed yesterday to push legislation that would force New York City to stop dumping raw sewage in the Hudson River by 1986.

Sens. Frank Lautenburg and Bill Bradley, both D-NJ, said three weeks of negotiations with the New Yorkers had failed to produce satisfactory compromise over the sewage dumping issue, which has tied up Senate consideration of Clean Water Act amendments.

New Jersey lawmakers want legislation that would impose penalties on New York City if it does not follow a court-ordered timetable to stop dumping raw sewage by 1986. The New Yorkers say the city is obeying the court and thus penalties are unnecessary.

"We made a good faith effort to work this out by addressing concerns of the City of New York," said Lautenberg and Bradley in a joint statement.

"At the same time, we sought assurances that tough federal action would be taken to make sure New York City will put a timely halt to this egregious environmental practice.

"It is incumbent upon all parties in the region to solve this dispute, and get on with the business of protecting our national environment," the New Jersey senators said.

Lautenberg and Bradley said that, given the collapse of negotiations, they would pursue penalties against New York City. However, they left the door open for further negotiations with the New Yorkers.

The sewage dispute erupted in June when Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., attached a provision to the House version of clean water legislation that would prohibit New York from increasing the amount of sewage it dumps in the Hudson—currently 195 million gallons a day—after March 15, 1986.

Howard said the provision was needed to ensure New York City continued to abide by the court-ordered timetable.

But Howard's provision outraged New York lawmakers, who said the city was complying with the court's orders and that Howard's proposal to cap sewage dumping would hurt the city's economy.

The New Yorkers charge Howard's amendment could have a "chilling effect" on housing and real estate development in New York City by raising the possibility of a ban on future sewage hookups if the city failed to meet the court-ordered deadline to end dumping.

NEW YORK SEWAGE CLOUDING TOURISM, INDUSTRY?

TOMS RIVER.—The continued dumping of treated and unprocessed sewage by New York City into waterways is preventing New Jersey's multi-million dollar tourism and fishing industries from growing, according to testimony during a legislative hearing yesterday.

"There is no question . . . the industry is stifled by pollution and adverse publicity, said Ray Bogan, head of United Boatman of New Jersey, which represents thousands of charter fishing and party boats.

"New Jersey could be one of the centers in the world for underwater diving, but because of pollution we don't have the industry," said Bogan.

New Jersey Assemblywoman Marlene Lynch Ford. D-Monmouth, told the more than 100 people at the hearing here that New York City discharges about 220 million gallons of raw sewage a day into the Hudson and East rivers.

The sewage which the city will not have to treat until at least the early 1990's, floats south to the waters off the New Jersey Shore, she said.

This summer, beaches at Seaside Park in Ocean County and at Belmar, Avon, Middletown in Monmouth County were closed for several days because of sewage from New York.

"If this kind of pollution continues, it could have a serious impact on our tourism industry—the second largest industry in the state," said Ford, the vice chairwoman of the Assembly Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

The committee scheduled the hearing after the Assembly passed a May resolution calling on the panel to study the impact of ocean dumping.

"It seems to me that the business interests of New York are given priority over those of our state." said Ford. "New Jersey cannot afford to wait on this issue and hope it takes care of itself."

Northern New Jersey counties also produce sludge—treated sewage—that is dumped off the state's shoreline, and the assemblywoman said the state should consider financing and supporting new technologies, including resource recovery, that would lead to an end of all ocean dumping.

New York and New Jersey use a sludge dumping site 12 miles offshore, and Ford and many of the 50 local officials and residents endorsed efforts to move the site to 106 miles off the coast.

Ford called on state officials to put pressure on New York City to end its dumping to untreated sewage, including during negotiations over unrelated projects by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey.

Rep. James J. Florio, D-N.J. called for the immediate end to ocean dumping, arguing it is environmentally unnacceptable.

"The continued ocean disposal of sewage discourages both government and private industry from biting the bullet—discourages them from seriously undertaking the planning and development of newly advanced, resource recovery technologies," Florio said.

"By denying the opportunity to dump sewage in our waterways, government can virtually assure the creation of the market for both public and private investment in resource recovery," he added.

"We're missing 15 to 20 species of fish that were in the ocean 20 years ago," said Swede Lovegrer, chairman of the Commercial Fisheries Commission.

"Fish don't come here anymore because of the pollution," he said, including porpoises, blowfish, whales, porgies and other species.

LAUTENBERG: NEW YORK "FLUSHES AND FORGETS"

NEW YORK (AP).—A U.S. Senator from New Jersey and four New Jersey mayors gathered yesterday to complain about what they called New York City's "flush and forget" policy of dumping of raw sewage into the Hudson River.

Sen. Frank Lauthenberg, D-N.J., first met with Jacqueline Schafer, regional administrator of the federal Environmental Protection Agency "to register a complaint" about unequal enforcement of clean water rules and then held a news conference at the site of the New York City Convention Center.

Lautenberg said he chose the West Side site because it is a symbol of New York City's policy of "dirty growth."

The senator explained that the EPA had approved permits for the convention center knowing that once completed, the center would dump as much as one million gallons of raw sewage a day into the Hudson River until the construction of two sewage treatment plants were completed.

"Only unanticipated construction delays may allow New Jersey and the Hudson River to escape this flush and forget pollution," Lautenberg said.

The senator further charged that while New Jersey dumps no untreated sewage into the Hudson River, New York City allows 220 million gallons a day of "you know what" to flow into the river.

"We don't want to be the only good guys, the only Boy Scouts on the block," he said.

The senator's statements were further reinforced by the mayors of four New Jersey townships—Bayonne, Hoboken, North Bergen and Weehawken—all located on the banks of the Hudson River.

Hoboken Mayor Steve Cappiello said his community took tests at different points along both sides of the river three years ago and discovered that there was 100 times more fecal matter on New York City's side.

Mayor Anthony DiVincent of North Bergen said his community had to spend $15 million of its own money to build sewage treatment plants. "If we have to do it, New York City should have to do it," he said.

James Marshall, a spokesman for the regional EPA office, confirmed that the city is dumping about 220 million gallons of raw sewage a day into the river while New Jersey's effluent is all treated.

But he said Miss Schafer explained to Lautenberg that New York City is in compliance with a 1982 consent agreement under which dumping of raw sewage into the Hudson River and East rivers would end by 1987 when the Red Hook and North River sewage treatment plants were completed.

This agreement was a renegotiated version of a pervious pact that was not met because of New York's fiscal problems, he said.

Lautenberg said that although he was satisfied that the EPA was observing the technical letter of the law, he wanted the agency to do more to make sure there are no new building permits or waivers issued that would delay an end to the flow of New York's raw sewage into the Hudson.

Asked if his effort was a ploy in the ongoing competition for new industry and business between New York City and New Jersey, Lautenberg said.

"I don't want to stop growth in New York. I want them to stop flushing in our water."

EPA CHIEF IS HAMSTRUNG ON NEW YORK SLUDGE DUMPING

(By J. Scott Orr)

WASHINGTON.—Environmental Protection Agency Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus testified yesterday he has witnessed the dumping of raw sewage into the Hudson River by New York City for more than a decade, but that there was little EPA could do about it.

The EPA chief also said New York was going about as fast as possible to meet cleanup deadlines, a stance sharply at variance with comments from New Jersey's junior Democratic senator, Frank Lautenberg.

In response to questions from Lautenberg, Ruckelshaus said New York City is complying with a schedule for the construction of sewage treatment plants and that, technically, the dumping is not in violation of the Clean Water Act.

Ruckelshaus said EPA believes the new treatment plants will be able to accommodate the unbridled development in recent years in Manhattan.

Ruckelshaus told the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, which is examining EPA's budget proposals, that his agency has no power to stop development, despite apparent degradation of the environment.

Lautenberg said there remains "considerable doubt" that the clean water schedule is being met or that the new treatment plants will be able to handle the increasing load.

"It's not only a question of schedule, but also a question of effectiveness," Lautenberg said. "Not only are we not meeting, in my view, the schedule to get this stuff treated, but that which is going to be treated is not going to be treated effectively," he added.

"My constituents are expressing themselves very clearly and in greater numbers and simply put, they're asking me why they have to swim in New York City's 'you know what,'" Lautenberg said.

A number of New Jersey congressmen have voiced objections to New York's continued sewage dumping and to the EPA's apparent double standard, which allows the city to continue to develop without sufficient sewage treatment facilities while New Jersey municipalities are forced to comply with treatment limits.

Rep. James Howard (D-3d Dist.) has promised to hold hearings on the issue this spring and Reps. Robert Roe (D-8th Dist.) and Frank Guarini (D-14th Dist.) have joined in calling for action.

"When I first returned to EPA," Ruckelshaus said yesterday, "I took a helicopter tour of New York along the Hudson River and witnessed first hand what I had witnessed ten years ago when I left EPA, namely the discharge of raw sewage into the Hudson River.

"There is nothing that quite matches the impact that it has on you when you when you see that first hand," he added. Ruckelshaus left the EPA helm in 1973, but returned to the post last year.

He went on to say the city has maintained a schedule for development of sewage treatment plants to stem the flow of untreated effluent into the Hudson and other waters.

"New York was on a schedule . . . for the abatement of those discharges into the Hudson River. They are still on that schedule . . . and are technically in compliance in that they are on a schedule to complete the plants that will ultimately insure that the 230 million gallons a day (of sewage) that are being discharged . . . is treated," he said.

"We believe that the schedule they are on is about as fast as . . . those deadlines can be met. We have been monitoring what's been going on there now for several years with the state of New York. We also think that they have adequate capacity when those plants are completed to absorb the growth," Ruckelshaus added.

Lautenberg, said after the testimony that he was not satisfied with the content of Ruckelshaus's response, but added he believes the Administrator is committed to remedying the problems.

"He said that New York is in compliance with the schedule, but I felt that there should be a closer look," said Lautenberg. "We'll have to push from the committee side."

Ruckelshaus noted, "I am aware of the frustration" of New Jerseyans "who are concerned about this continued discharge and who are impatient at the construction schedule that New York is on to abate that pollution."

That schedule was set up under a court consent decree that was revised in 1982, according to Jacqueline Schafer, administrator of the EPA region that includes both New York and New Jersey.

She said the schedule calls for some treatment of all sewage by August 1987, when two new treatment plants are slated to be in place. She added conservation is running ahead of schedule.

Ruckelshaus said that even if the agency were to determine that New York's sewage treatment plants will not be adequate to accommodate new development, it could not prevent that growth.

"It's our responsibility to insure that there is adequate sewage treatment available to absorb growth, but we really are not in the position to try to stop growth or make those judgments for New York City," he said.

"On the other hand," he added, "we do have a responsibility to insure that they can adequately treat whatever discharges are the result of growth and we are monitoring that very carefully."

EPA Failure on New York Pollution Spurs Call for Congress To Act

(By Gordon Bishop)

Sen. Frank Lautenberg (D-NJ) and four mayors from New Jersey Hudson River waterfront communities stood next to the sprawling New York City Convention Center yesterday and demanded an end to New York's "dirty growth development policies" that pollute metropolitan waterway and Jersey Shore beaches.

And if the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) doesn't have the authority to see that the pollution is cleaned up, Lautenberg said Congress should take action.

Immediately before the public demonstration at 34th Street along the Hudson River, site of the "world's largest" convention center, Lautenberg—a new member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee—met with the regional administrator of the EPA.

Lautenberg said the EPA's regional chief, Jacqueline Schafer, was unable to tell him why New York City continues to build major projects that add to the 220 million gallons a day of raw sewage now going into the Hudson and East rivers and New York Harbor.

"There was no satisfactory explanation on the double-standards practiced by EPA," Lautenberg said, referring to how New York City is allowed to build and pollute, while on the other side of the Hudson River, New Jersey municipalities and industry must conform to stringent water pollution controls.

The EPA is required by Congress to enforce the 1972 Clean Water Act, which has set the same pollution control standards for New York, New Jersey and the rest of the nation. New York City, however, has been allowed to "technically" violate those standards, according to Lautenberg.

Schafer did not attend the convention center protest by New Jersey public officals. Lautenberg met with her in the EPA's Region 2 Office in lower Manhattan.

Attending the demonstration were, in addition to Lautenberg state Sen. Raymond Lesniak (D-Union) and four mayors of waterfront municipalities—Steven Cappiello of Hoboken. Stanley D. Iacone of Weehawken, Anthony DiVincent of North Bergen, and Dennis Collins of Bayonne.

Lautenberg said if the EPA does not have sufficient legislative mandate to control New York City's building pollution practices, then I and other members of Congress are prepared to give it."

EPA's top official, William D. Ruckelshaus, tesified before Lautenberg's environment committee Friday and advised him that his agency had no power to stop development in New York City, despite apparent degradation of the environment.

In yesterday's meeting in New York, Schafer also said EPA was "powerless" in dealing with New York's water pollution problem.

New York City has sued the EPA to continue sludge dumping off the Jersey Shore. The city won that round in the federal district court in Manhattan. For reasons never made known by the EPA, the federal agency refused to appeal the lower court ruling favoring New York City.

On the raw discharges into the East and Hudson Rivers, EPA took New York City to court and the city was put on a "timetable of compliance."

The treatment plants for the West and East Sides of Manhattan were to have been completed by 1976-77, but the city has been able to obtain one extension after another under the court order.

Yet the EPA cracked down on development in New Jersey in the mid-1970s, reducing growth by the equivalent of five Battery Park Cities.

Battery Park City is a $2 billion "minicity" being built on landfill along the lower Hudson River in Manhattan. The 3 million gallons a day of sewage from Battery Park City is going to an obsolete treatment plant in Brooklyn in need of more than $100 million worth of repairs. The Brooklyn plant sends poorly treated effluent into the East River.

In comparing the two states, Lautenberg said "New Jersey is a progressive state: We want to be able to not just work in New Jersey, but to live there as well" in a healthy environment.

The senator made his remarks at New York's convention center because, he pointed out, it is "one of the symbols of New York City's 'flush-and-forget' growth mentality."

Lautenberg said that when ground was broken for the convention center, the plans were to dump up to 1 million gallons a day of raw sewage into the Hudson River until the North River Plant at 139th Street was completed. The West Side treatment plant is expected to be in operation sometime in 1985-86.

"If New York City will not join in a clean-up program following New Jersey's 'clean growth model,' then EPA should step in," Lautenberg asserted.

"The development policy which prevails here (New York) is economic forethought with environmental afterthought."

Among the points raised by Lautenberg at the meeting with Schafer were:

New Jersey wants "equal enforcement" of rules promoting clean growth on both sides of the river.

New Jersey has been vigorous in pursuing a strategy of clean growth, which in 1972 resulted in moratoriums on development in some 100 municipalities until secondary treatment plants were in operation. At least 77 full or partial sewer bans are still in effect in New Jersey. There are no sewer bans controlling growth in New York City.

New York City has resisted compliance with the Clean Water Act and was forced to complete its sewage treatment system under court order. The city has been using the "protection of that order to pursue a policy of dirty growth."

New Jersey suffers a double penalty. It sustains a competitive disadvantage with New York by upholding the clean growth policies and the Garden State is the recipient of New York's water pollution affecting New Jersey's tourist and fishing industries.

Hoboken Mayor Cappiello said his comunity was placed under a court order three years ago to stop development until it made repairs on its primary treatment plant. (Manhattan has no operating treatment plants. All wastes are flushed right into the rivers.)

"We spent millions of dollars to improve our sewer plant, yet New York continues to pollute," Cappiello declared.

The Hoboken mayor said his health officials took samples of the Hudson River water on the New Jersey side and sampled water directly opposite Hoboken on the New York side.

"The fecal coliform count on the New York side was 100 times higher than on the New Jersey side, but we were the ones who were forced to comply with the law, or face stiff fines," Cappiello complained.

Fecal coliform is the bacteria and viruses found in raw sweage that cause eye, ear, nose and throat infections, as well as diarrhea and other internal disorders.

Bayonne Mayor Collins said "If we (New Jersey) don't clean up immediately, we're threatened with $25,000 a day penalties. We must be on secondary treatment by 1988, an effort that's costing us $50 million."

New York City has appealed to the EPA not to go to secondary treatment because of the extra expense. The EPA has, so far, declined to go along with that request. New York is scheduled to go to secondary treatment by 1991-92.

Secondary treatment is 90 percent removal of pollutants in waste water. Primary treatment is 30 percent removal.

Manhattan's first treatment plants will be at the primary level in 1985 or '86, barring any further obstacles and delays that have set the city's sewer program back about 10 years.

North Bergen Mayor DiVincent said his community has just spent $15 million of its own money to improve its primary treatment plant.

"We had to," he added. "Violation of the Clean Water Act would have resulted in $10,000 a day fines we cannot afford."

Lautenberg, who is also a member of the Senate Banking and Commerce Committees, said he is not opposed to growth in New York City, only "dirty growth."

"We in New Jersey would like to have a clean Big Apple, not a rotten Apple," Lautenberg commented.

"A clean Hudson River is in everyone's interest: New York, New Jersey and the millions of visitors who come to our two states for recreation."

Besides Lautenberg's environment committee inquiry into the New York-EPA pollution dilemma, the House Public Works Committee has called for an investigation into the "double standard" EPA has been pursuing, one for New York, another for New Jersey.

The House probe is being spearheaded by Rep. James J. Howard (D-3d Dist.).

LAUTENBERG CHAMPIONS FIGHT TO STEM TIDE OF NEW YORK POLLUTION

(By Gordon Bishop)

From where Frank Lautenberg was standing, New Jersey looked like a brilliant jewel against the murky waters of the Hudson River.

New Jersey's "junior" United States Senator was standing by the "world's largest" convention center on the West Side of Manhattan, watching the filth flowing out of the bloated Big Apple right into the Hudson River, degrading the precious marine environment shared by both New York and New Jersey.

One could immediately detect the difference between the Empire State and the Garden State, New York City, from this vantage point on the Hudson River, was reeking from "dirty growth," while across the grimy tributary, "clean growth" was clearly evident along the New Jersey waterfront.

Lautenberg travelled to Manhattan Island Saturday morning to scold New York for not playing the environmental game according to the rules. He was accompanied by four mayors from waterfront communities in Hudson County. They were tired of New York dumping on New Jersey and they wanted to know why and how the Big Apple was getting away with flagrant violations of the Clean Water Act.

They chose the convention center to protect New York's reckless pollution habits because, as Lautenberg aptly pointed out, it is a disgraceful symbol of the city's "flush-and-forget growth mentality."

Manhattan's vertical growth during the past 20 years has been at the expense of our great public waterways. The Hudson and East Rivers, the New York Harbor, the Jersey Shore and Long Island surf waters.

As if the destruction of these vital marine resources was not enough, New York sued the federal government three years ago so it could continue dumping more than 3 million tons a year of sewage-sludge in a wasted area off the Jersey Shore known as the "Dead Sea."

New York sues to pollute, while New Jersey spends taxpayers' money to protect the environment.

It was fitting for a New Jersey entrepreneur to remind New York of its bad business manners. Frank Lautenberg is a successful business who long ago recognized that you cannot have a sound economy without a healthy environment.

"We want our residents not only to be able to work in New Jersey, but to live there as well." Lautenberg spoke into a battery of media microphones gathered for the first bi-state press conference on New York's continuing discharge of some 220 million gallons a day of raw sewage into the Hudson and East Rivers.

Before he showed up at the convention center construction site, Lautenberg met with the regional administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Sitting in her office at 26 Federal Plaza in lower Manhatten, Jacqueline Schafer informed the senator that EPA had "no power" to control New York City's unbridled "dirty growth" development.

Somehow that didn't wash with Lautenberg. He knew of EPA's actions against New Jersey in the mid-1970s to halt population growth and development in Ocean County, a sparsely inhabited region ready for some one-family homes. EPA effectively limited development in a wide-open area by equivalent of five Battery Park Cities.

Battery Park City is New York's latest contribution to the Hudson River, a $2 billion commercial-residential high-rise complex built on landfill in the river itself!

When fully occupied within three years. Battery Park City will boast a population of more than 50,000.

Manhattan Island, you see, is filled up with excessive towering development. The city is running out of space, so it is filling in the Hudson River and creating new real estate. The city wants to take another 10 percent of the river for Westway, the world's most expensive road.

On and on it goes, one megastructure after another generating sewage that New York cannot handle. Yet EPA remains quiet, pretending that the sewage, the sludge, the garbage and other ecological indigestion will be relieved in due time.

New Jersey residents are tired of waiting for New York to get its pollution control act together. Postponements, delays, promises and always more pollution result in dirty water, air and land. Among other things, New York for years has exported its garbage to the Hackensack Meadowlands because there is no place in the city to store mountains of solid waste.

Lautenberg has had enough, and so have New Jersey's waterfront mayors and the millions of people who are forced to swim in waters tainted by New York toilet wastes.

A member of the Senate Environment Committee, Lautenberg is now going to investigate the rather cozy relationship between New York City and EPA, the agency responsible for protecting the environment. EPA has unabashedly been giving New York a license to pollute. Lautenberg wants EPA to enforce the law on both sides of the Hudson River, something the agency has not been doing since it was created in 1970.

Also probing the EPA's New York conflict is the House Public Works Committee, chaired by Rep. James J. Howard, whose congressional district in the heartland of the Jersey Shore is the helpless victim of New York's flush-and-forget growth mentality.

STATE GRANTS FOR PRIMARY CARE RESEARCH, DEMONSTRATION, AND SERVICES

SEC. 504. (a) Part C of title XIX is repealed.

"(b) Title XIX is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART C—STATE GRANTS FOR PRIMARY CARE RESEARCH, DEMONSTRATION, AND SERVICES

"PURPOSE; AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1921. (a) For the purpose of—

"(1) improving access to primary health services for medically underserved populations,

"(2) improving the delivery of primary health services to medically underserved populations, particularly the effectiveness, efficiency and quality of such services, and

"(3) improving the health status of such populations, through reductions in—

"(A) the incidence of preventable diseases and illnesses and premature death, and

"(B) the need for costly inpatient and long-term care services, the Secretary shall make payments under allotments, in accordance with the provisions of this part, to States for the conduct of activities authorized by this part.

"(b) For allotments under this part, there are authorized to be appropriated $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.

"ALLOTMENTS

"SEC. 1922. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), from the amounts appropriated under section 1921 for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount equal to the product of—

"(A) the total amount appropriated for such fiscal year, multiplied by

"(B) the ratio (stated as a percentage) that the total number of low-income persons residing in the State bears to the total number of low-income persons residing in the United States.

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)—

"(A) the total amount of the allotment for each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987 shall not be less than 1 percent of the total amount appropriated under section 1921 for such fiscal year;

"(B) the total amount of the allotment for each of the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands for each such fiscal year shall not be less than one-fourth of 1 percent of the total amount appropriated under section 1921 for such fiscal year; and

"(C) the total amount of the allotment for each of American Samoa and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands for each such fiscal year shall not be less than one-sixteenth of 1 percent of the total amount appropriated under section 1921 for such fiscal year.

"(b) To the extent that all the funds appropriated under section 1921 for a fiscal year and available for allotment in such fiscal year are not otherwise allotted to States because—

"(1) one or more States have not submitted an application or description of activities in accordance with section 1925 for such fiscal year;

"(2) one or more States have notified the Secretary that they do not intend to use the full amount of their allotment; or

"(3) some State allotments are offset or repaid under section 1906(b)(3) (as such section applies to this part pursuant to section 1925(e)); such excess shall be allotted among each of the remaining States in proportion to the amount otherwise allotted to such States for such fiscal year without regard to this subsection.

"(c)(1) If the Secretary—

"(A) receives a request from the governing body of an Indian tribe or tribal organization within any State that funds under this subpart be provided directly by the Secretary to such tribe or organization, and

"(B) determines that the members of such tribe or tribal organization would be better served by means of grants made directly by the Secretary under this subpart, the Secretary shall reserve from amounts which would otherwise be allotted to such State under subsection (a) for a fiscal year the amount determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) The Secretary shall reserve for the purpose of paragraph (1) from amounts that would otherwise be allotted to such State under subsection (a) an amount equal to the amount which bears the same ratio to the State's allotment for the fiscal year involved under subsection (a) as the total number of low-income persons in the tribe during such fiscal year bears to the total number of low-income persons residing in the State during such fiscal year.

"(3) The amount reserved by the Secretary on the basis of a determination under this subsection shall be granted to the Indian tribe or tribal organization serving the persons for whom such a determination has been made.

"(4) In order for an Indian tribe or tribal organization to be eligible for a grant for a fiscal year under this subsection, it shall submit to the Secretary a plan for such fiscal year which meets such criteria as the Secretary may prescribe.

"PAYMENTS UNDER ALLOTMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 1923. (a) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make payments, as provided by section 6503(a) of title 31, United States Code, to each State from its allotment under section 1922 from amounts appropriated for that fiscal year.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), any amount paid to a State for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available for the next fiscal year to such State if the Secretary determines that there is good cause for such funds remaining unobligated.

"(2) If the amount paid to a State under this part for a fiscal year which remains unobligated at the end of such fiscal year exceeds 20 percent of the amount allotted to such State under section 1922 for such fiscal year, the amount of such excess shall not remain available for the next fiscal year to such State under paragraph (1) and shall be returned to the Treasury and credited as miscellaneous receipts.

"USE OF ALLOTMENTS

"SEC. 1924. (a) Amounts paid to a State under section 1923 from its allotment under section 1922 may be used to—

"(1) make grants to eligible entities to provide primary health services to medically underserved populations in the State; and

"(2) conduct, or make grants for the conduct of, research, demonstrations, or the development of methods to evaluate—

"(A) alternative systems of reimbursement for primary health services;

"(B) new or innovative methods for the provision of primary health services;

"(C) methods of attracting and retaining primary health service providers (including physicians, dentists, physician assistants, nurse practitioners, and other health professionals), both individually and as teams, to train and practice among medically underserved populations;

"(D) different types of organizational models and relationships, including federations of providers of primary health services, designed to meet unique primary health and dental health service needs; and

"(E) methods of reducing long-term institutional costs by improving service connections between providers of primary health services and home and community-based services; or

"(F) such other matters which will enhance the availability or accessibility of primary health services.

"(b)(1) A State may not use funds allotted under section 1922 for the purposes of administering this part or administering an agreement under section 330(g).

"(2)(A) Of the amounts paid to a State under section 1923 for each fiscal year—

"(i) not less than 80 percent shall be used to make grants under paragraph (1) of subsection (a); and

"(ii) not more than 20 percent may be used to conduct, or to make grants for the conduct of, activities described in paragraph (2) of subsection (a).

"(B) Not more than 10 percent of the amounts paid to a State under section 1923 for each fiscal year may be used for activities described in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) which are directly conducted by the State.

"(3) If a State makes a grant under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) for the provision of primary health services to a medically underserved population which is in the service area (determined in accordance with section 332(e)(3)(I)) of an entity which is a recipient of a grant under section 330, a State shall make such grant to such entity.

"(c) The Secretary may provide technical assistance to States in planning and operating activities to be carried out under this part.

"(d) A State may not use amounts paid to it under section 1923 to—

"(1) provide inpatient services;

"(2) make cash payments to intended recipients of health services;

"(3) purchase or improve land, purchase, construct, or permanently improve (other than minor remodeling) and building or other facility, or purchase major medical equipment;

"(4) satisfy any requirement for the expenditure of non-Federal funds as a condition for the receipt of Federal funds; or

"(5) provide financial assistance to any entity other than a public or nonprofit private entity.

The Secretary may waive the limitation contained in paragraph (3) upon the request of a State if the Secretary finds that there are extraordinary circumstances to justify the waiver and that granting the waiver will assist in carrying out this part.

"APPLICATION AND DESCRIPTION OF ACTIVITIES; REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 1925. (a) In order to receive an allotment for a fiscal year under section 1922 each State shall submit an application to the Secretary. Each such application shall be in such form and submitted by such date as the Secretary shall require. Each such application shall contain assurances that the legislature of the State has complied with the provisions of subsection (b) and that the State will meet the requirements of subsection (c).

"(b) After the expiration of the first fiscal year in which a State receives an allotment under section 1922, no funds shall be allotted to such State for any fiscal year under such section unless the legislature of the State conducts public hearings on the proposed use and distribution of funds to be provided under section 1923 for such fiscal year.

"(c) As part of the annual application required by subsection (a), the chief executive officer of each State shall certify that the State—

"(1) agrees to use the funds allotted to it under section 1922 in accordance with the requirements of this part;

"(2) has identified the populations, area, and localities in the State with a need for the primary health services for which funds may be provided by the State under this part;

"(3) has established an appropriate mechanism to administer grants to be made under section 1924, and to comply with the requirements of this part;

"(4) will participate in the coordination of activities supported under this part with the activities of other providers of primary health services within the State (including entities which are recipients of grants under sections 329 and 330), to ensure that such activities are carried out in an effective manner and without duplication of effort;

"(5) will establish, after providing reasonable notice and opportunity for the submission of comments, reporting requirements and reasonable criteria to evaluate the fiscal, managerial, and clinical performance of entities which receive grants under section 329 of grants under section 1924 and under section 329 or section 330 to comply with different reporting requirements and criteria than are required under section 329 or section 330, as the case may be; and

"(b) agrees that Federal funds made available under section 1923 for any period will be so used as to supplement and increase the level of State, local, and other non-Federal funds that would in the absence of such Federal funds be made available for the programs and activities for which funds are provided under that section and will in no event supplant such State, local, and other non-Federal funds.

The Secretary may not prescribe for a State the manner of compliance with the requirements of this subsection.

"(d)(1) The chief executive officer of a State shall, as part of the application required by subsection (a), also prepare and furnish the Secretary (in accordance with such form as the Secretary shall provide) with a description of the intended use of the payments the State will receive under section 1923 for the fiscal year for which the application is submitted, including—

"(A) a description of the populations, areas, and localities in the State which the State has identified as needing primary health services;

"(B) a statement of goals and objectives for meeting the needs identified pursuant to subparagraph (A);

"(C) information on the activities to be supported and services to be provided with payments under this part;

"(D) after the expiration of the first fiscal year in which the State received payments under section 1923, a description of the criteria and methods that will be used by the State for the distribution of payments under such section, and the relationship of such criteria and methods to the achievement of the purposes of this part; and

"(E) the information and data which the State intends to collect respecting activities supported under this part.

"(2) The description required by paragraph (1) shall be made public within the State in such manner as to facilitate comment from any person (including any Federal or other public agency) during development of the description and after its transmittal. The description shall be revised (consistent with this section) throughout the year as may be necessary to reflect substantial changes in the programs and activities assisted by the State under this part, and any revision shall be subject to be requirements of the preceding sentence.

"(e) Except where inconsistent with the provisions of this part, the provisions of section 1903(b), section 1906(a), paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 1906(b), section 1906(c), and sections 1907, 1908, and 1909 shall apply to this part in the same manner as such provisions apply to part A of this title.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

KIM DAE JUNG'S RETURN TO KOREA

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I was disturbed to hear of statements by South Korean officials suggesting that the respected Korean opposition leader Kim Dae Jung would be arrested and returned to prison when he returns to Korea this year because his political activity in the United States violated the "agreement" by which he was allowed to come here 2 years ago. In the past year the South Korean Government has taken a number of positive steps toward broadening the political freedom of its people. The arrest and imprisonment of Kim Dae Jung for exercising his fundamental human rights, such as freedom of speech, would be a clear reversal of this progress. I urge the South Korean Government to ensure Mr. Kim's safe return to his homeland, to grant him amnesty from the sentence that is now suspended and to lift the ban it has imposed on his political activity.

In a recent article in the New York Times, Donald L. Renard, who formerly headed the State Department's Office of Korean Affairs, explained why the U.S. Government should strongly support Kim Dae Jung's return to Korea. I request that the full article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 26, 1984]

FULLY BACK KIM'S RETURN TO SEOUL

(By Donald L. Ranard)

WASHINGTON.—The announced intention of Kim Dae Jung, the South Korean opposition leader, to end his American exile by returning home before the end of 1984 "to struggle for the return of democracy" puts President Chun Doo Hwan on the spot and places the Reagan Administration in a dilemma by focusing attention anew on abuses by the authoritarian regime that it would prefer to ignore.

Although the Chun regime maintains that Mr. Kim's personal safety is not an issue, hanging darkly over Mr. Kim's decision is the assassination of the Filipino dissident Benigno S. Aquino Jr. at the Manila airport as he returned home last year under similar circumstances.

For two decades, Kim Dae Jung has been persecuted by South Korean governments whose undemocratic institutions he has sought to change. He was hounded by the Korean Central Intelligence Agency during his unsuccessful 1971 effort to unseat the late military ruler Gen. Park Chung Hee in elections beset by allegations of fraud. After General Park declared martial law in 1972, the K.C.I.A. followed Mr. Kim to America and harassed him here. In 1973, while in Tokyo he was kidnapped by the K.C.I.A. Succeeding years saw house arrest, conviction on a phony charge of sedition, then a death sentence commuted first to life imprisonment and then to 20 years in prison. In December 1982, after serving two and a half years of the sedition charge, he was freed and went into exile in America for medical treatment.

The Reagan Administration cannot doubt his attachment to democratic institutions. This entitles him to unqualified sympathy for his intention to try to counter "trends toward desperation and radicalization" and to strive for "peaceful democratization." Thus, the State Department should have voiced a reasonably strong statement of support. Instead, it reacted cautiously, saying limply that his return was "a matter for the Korean Government to handle, but we have expressed our hope to all concerned that his return will be trouble-free insofar as his personal situation is concerned." This barely constituted an endorsement of Mr. Kim's courageous decision and was not public encouragement that would press Seoul to readmit him. Contrast it with the department's reaction upon learning of his kidnapping: it promptly expressed high regard for his friendship, respect for his political leadership and grave concern for his safety.

Moreover, obviously unhappy with Mr. Kim's plans, some department officers are trying to dissuade him subtly by saying that the threat to him comes not from the Chun regime but from North Korea. Nonsense. As a cause célèbre in the South, Mr. Kim is worth more to the North alive than removed from the political scene.

Because of Mr. Chun's successful image-building trip to Japan and his need to demonstrate greater openness in domestic life in preparation for South Korea's role as host for the 1988 Olympics, the regime probably will readmit Mr. Kim. But its warning that it will take "necessary steps, according to the law" if he returns suggests he'll be back in prison. For Mr. Kim articulately criticizes what is wrong. Despite economic progress (accomplished partly by the breakup of the labor movement), easing of control on campuses and the release of some political prisoners, press freedom is abridged, the National Assembly mocks representative government, the Consitution still uses indirect elections to perpetuate authoritarian rule.

The State Department maintains that its handling of the Kim affair represents successful quiet diplomacy; the Administration rescued him from a death sentence in 1981 (at the exorbitant price of General Chun's state visit to Washington) and gave him refuge. But Mr. Kim will nonetheless rivet public attention on Chun abuses and make it difficult for Elliott Abrams, Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, to continue ignoring them, no matter how many times he deflectively berates left-wing Nicaragua, Vietnam and Cuba.

If the Administration truly seeks a democratic South Korea, if it truly cares about human rights there, it will tell President Chun in no uncertain terms: listen to Kim Dae Jung and keep your hands off him.●

JAMES L. KENDRICKS, OUTSTANDING BUSINESSMAN

● Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an outstanding businessman, humanitarian, and citizen, James L. Kendricks. As president and chief executive officer of Augusta Blueprint & Microfilm, Inc., James Kendricks has distinguished himself through dedication, skill, and hard-work as a successful businessman in the city of Augusta. Despite considerable adversity, James has over the last 13 years moved his business from a two-man operation to one that now employs 11 full-time personnel, and services accounts throughout the Southeast.

More than just a distinguished businessman, James Kendricks, is also deeply concerned about, and responsive to, human needs. He is vice chairman of the Richmond County Human Relations Commission, chairman of the Augusta Opportunities Industrialization Center, board chairman of the Savannah River Area Economic Development Committee, a member of the Georgia Small Business Administration advisory council, and a member of the board of trustee Williams Memorial CME Church.

On Monday, October 1, 1984, at the empire room of the Twin Towers in Atlanta, James L. Kendricks will be the recipient of the regional minority retail businessman of the year award, in recognition of his services and dedication as an entrepreneur in Augusta and throughout the Southeast. Mr. President, I respectfully request that my colleagues join me in congratulating James Kendricks on his outstanding career as a businessman, and on receiving this prestigious award.●

DOD'S SOFTWARE ENGINEERING INSTITUTE

● Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, recently an excellent article from Computer Graphics World entitled "DOD's Software Engineering Institute" was brought to my attention. The article offers an interesting and important perspective on an item in the 1985 Department of Defense authorization and appropriations bills that has received little attention.

The author of the article, Mr. Kenton Pattie, is highly critical of the creation of the Software Engineering Institute [SEI], whose startup costs, according to DOD's request, will be $8 million. As envisioned by the Defense Department, SEI would be a nonprofit, tax-exempt entity run by a university or consortium of universities that would help to develop DOD computer software which is currently developed primarily by private firms.

In his article Mr. Pattie charges that the creation of SEI is yet another instance in which:

First, the DOD is evading congressional intent regarding competition for Government contracts.

Second, the DOD attempts to lure non-Government organizations into lobbying for certain Defense appropriations.

Third, the DOD can, with a relatively small initial funding request, begin a long and expensive chain of multi-million dollar appropriations for a project that, whether proven effective or not, will acquire a life of its own.

In light of President Reagan's huge defense spending increases, it is all the more important that we scrutinize every new funding request from DOD. Mr. Pattie raises serious questions about one such request—the SEI—and about the methods employed by DOD to secure congressional support for the request. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to review the article on the SEI and to turn a critical eye toward the SEI funding proposal that is now before Congress.

Mr. President, I ask that the Computer Graphics World article entitled "DOD's Software Engineering Institute" be printed in the RECORD immediately following my statement.

The article referred to follows:

[From Computer Graphics World, August 1984]

DOD'S SOFTWARE ENGINEERING INSTITUTE

(By Kenton H. Pattie)

The Department of Defense (DOD), after breaking ground for some of the early work of the computer industry and having become one of its major clients, has become dissatisfied with the very companies it helped to create.

A recent Institute for Defense Analyses (IDA) report claims that the computer software for which DOD spends between $5 and $6 billion each year is produced by an "immature, labor-intensive" private work force of 50,000 programmers of whom "only a minority have had formal exposure to recent software engineering ideas." The report goes on to charge that as long as contracts are won and deliveries accepted, computer industry management perceives little incentive for upsetting the status quo.

Disenchantment with the industry is echoed by Lt. Colonel John Leary, Office of the Undersecretary of Defense for Research and Engineering, who says: "How do I tell if I'm being smoked by the contractor? There are as many opinions as there are contractors . . . I have no way to tell if the contractor is right . . . they popularize their own methods."

The view at the Pentagon is that computer firms realize greater profits through private sector sales and, therefore, as the IDA report states, new technology development tends to be geared towards the more profitable commercial applications and markets. The report says that the private firms' performance for DOD is unsatisfactory for several reasons.

Defense requirements are larger and more complex than those considered large by commercial standards.

Private firms accept real-time response in the microsecond range, while military missions require response in the millisecond range.

Defense software has to operate in "bare and remote" environments, too far from commercially supported host environments.

Whereas computer software failure in a commercial system may have unpleasant economic or even life-threatening consequences, the failure of a military system may well imperil the defense of the nation.

If you think this is a rather morbid outlook, read on. There's even more to be glum about.

Taking the position that the problem lies in shortcomings of the computer industry, the Department has decided to create the Software Engineering Institute (SEI), a non-profit, tax-exempt entity to be run by a university or consortium of universities. While conceding that the new Institute would be offering yet another opinion, Leary feels that SEI's institutional biases will be less harmful than commercial biases. "Without going through the standard procurement procedure to solve a problem, I will be able to go to the bookshelf and pull off the latest report from the Institute."

However, many industry observers feel that SEI will never live up to the dreams of its planners since it will not necessarily cause DOD to rely less on private firms for computer software engineering. Sheer numbers indicate what SEI will be up against. By 1990, 10% of the Department's budget will be for the purchase of software. This could amount to $35.4 billion. Edith W. Martin, Deputy Under Secretary of Defense, predicts that we may well be short over a million software professionals by 1990, by which time we will have become completely dependent on software for our national defense.

Blake Smith, the Air Force procurement officer handling creation of the Institute, says that "it's important we have clear communications with industry. If the Institute comes to industry for information, industry has got to feel the information won't be abused or be used against them. The work of the Institute must be viewed as beneficial to industry too." However, on being asked whether the industry could go directly to SEI to get help or information, Smith responded negatively. SEI will be 100% dedicated to DOD, althought other government agencies like NASA may indirectly benefit.

According to Smith, SEI will be created along the same lines as Lincoln Lab, a tax-exempt research and engineering firm on Hascomb Air Force Base run by M.I.T. But when I called Lincoln Lab, with its $250 million budget and payroll of 2,000, this is how the conversation went with Mel Herlin, assistant to the director.

Question. Can a private firm come here directly to get information on the work you are doing?

Answer. No. The only way is through a government agency.

Question. Do you have a list of research and engineering projects that are currently underway?

Answer. No. We don't make our work public. It is distributed through the Defense agencies we work with.

Question. Do you mean that people in the Department of Defense receive a list of your reports and order them off the list?

Answer. No. It's not focused that way.

Question. How do people find out what you are doing?

Answer. They have to have a need to know.

Question. If I'm a defense contractor and want to find out what the lab knows about radar, could I come to you and get the information?

Answer. No. You'd have to go through the office that awarded your contract and they would establish if there is a need to know.

Question. How would they know if they don't see your reports?

Answer. If they want to find out, we give briefings here. They come up here.

Question. You mean that you regularly brief procurement officers so they know about your work so they can clue in the contractors they are making awards to?

Answer. Oh, no. Our briefings are for people on a higher level. Certainly the Secretary of Defense knows that we do, and we brief four-star generals.

Blake Smith predicts that SEI would benefit from a wide distribution of its information, but conceded that labs like Lincoln are tightening up to squelch leaks of technical information to overseas firms and foreign governments. He also had some things to say relative to the Institute and private firms.

Question. Do you expect the new Institute to contract out much of its work to private firms?

Answer. No. Institutes of this kind are involved in labor-intensive work that wouldn't lend itself to outside contractors. Of course, they'll have to contract for the hardware they need. There are going to be very few subcontracting opportunities. If the work could be subcontracted, Defense should go directly to that source without going through the Institute.

Question. Will private firms be able to compete with the Institute for software engineering work needed by the government?

Answer. No. The work that's given to the center must be sole-source. If it could be done competitively, it would be offered to a commercial contractor in the first place. We'll only do at the research center what can't be done by commercial firms.

Question. Who will make the decision as to what work the Institute gets?

Answer. It would be up to the Defense services working through the center's joint advisory panel.

Even though Congress hasn't appropriated any funding yet, Deputy Under Secretary Martin is moving ahead to find a nonprofit contractor to operate SEI. Her formal announcement concerning plans for the Institute coincided with Congressional consideration of the Defense Authorization bill. After she asked Congress for $8 million in first-year money for SEI, Martin's announcement whetted the appetites of universities that thrive on this kind of contract work. One month later, a private briefing was given for the 14 universities and consortia that had indicated an interest in bidding. The request for proposals was published a week later.

By this time, the House had cut the $8 million to $5 million. The Senate bill had authorized $8 million, although the Institute was not mentioned in the Senate's report authorizing funds for Defense in fiscal 1985. Even if SEI survives the authorization process, it still must receive appropriations under a separate Defense Appropriations bill.

The strategy is very simple. The Defense Department dangles the multi-million dollar Institute in front of hungry universities so that they will lobby Congress to fund SEI. When I asked one Air Force officer who in Congress favors the funding of SEI, he replied that Senators and Representatives from states with universities that want the contract will quickly become supporters.

Here is what's at stake: 110 million Federal dollars over the next five years. Maybe more, depending on how many demands the Armed Forces make on SEI. By the fifth year, the Institute would have 237 people with an average salary of $65,000.

Understandably, creation of SEI has not been greeted enthusiastically by industry. It has been opposed by the International Communications Industries Association, the Professional Services Council, and the Electronics Industries Association. Even organizations that Edith Martin claims are supporting formation of the Institute are lukewarm or know little about it. Martin claims that the idea for SEI came from joint meetings of government, industry, and universities. She is quick to claim that Hughes Aircraft Corporation, Tartan A&E, IBM, Wafer Tec, NASTEC Corporation and Software A&E are in her camp. In truth, however, most SEI support is coming from Martin and her staff.

The real problem is not failure by private industry to meet defense needs, but DOD itself—its poor management of software contracts, cost overruns due to poorly devised government specifications, antiquated and complicated procurement systems, and failure to develop an overall system for handling software problems.

Martin has decided not to try knocking heads in the three services, but to kick the ball to a university instead—in the desperate hope that it can do what she and her staff have been unable to.

In fact, this will be the first time in 20 years that the government has created a Federally Funded Research and Development Center (FFRDC). Like IDA and Lincoln Lab, these are operated as exclusive servants of the government with a guaranteed existence, void of competition. They have exclusive client relations with Pentagon insiders and minimal public visibility. Since they are not "government," they get less scrutiny and pay higher salaries than a government agency would. And, other than reporting directly to their client agency, they have no responsibilities to the public.

The Software Engineering Institute will soon be sharing a $4 billion-per-year pie, along with the rest of the Nation's 35 FFRDC's. Proponents of SEI predict it will be a critical first link in the chain leading to "revolutionary" improvement and claim it will establish impressive schedules and productivities of its own through first use of the technologies it develops. The fact that it does not need to compete, pay taxes, or share information with taxpaying companies seems to bother no one except those of us in the industry.

A university will be paid to set up a new software engineering business, giving it an exclusive pipeline to the biggest spender of them all, only because the DOD bureaucrats have failed and put the blame on the computer industry. Five years from now, we will be able to say, "I told you so." But by then, the Institute will have flourished, its roots fertilized by hundreds of millions of tax-free dollars and nurtured by four-star generals who probably don't even read reports on computer engineering.●

THE RETIREMENT OF JEAN M. EVANS

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the contributions of Mr. Jean M. Evans, professional staff member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, who will be leaving our staff this week after 37 years of dedicated public service.

Jean Evans has served the U.S. Senate in an outstanding fashion since he joined our staff. He was one of the original staff members of the Senate Intelligence Committee, joining us only a few months after the committee was established in May 1976. He has served us loyally and in an outstanding fashion ever since.

Following his graduation from the University of Vermont in 1941 where he received a bachelor of philosophy degree and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, he joined the U.S. Army. Over a 4-year period, and after eight campaigns, he rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel. At the end of World War II, Lt. Col. Evans mustered out of the service and earned a juris doctor law degree from Columbia University. Later he joined the Central Intelligence Agency, which he served with distinction for 24 years, retiring in 1974.

Mr. President, I am constrained from discussing in a public forum some of the activities with which Mr. Evans was involved during his quarter century service with the CIA. However, it is fair to say that his career was a very successful one and he rose to the rank of GS-17 because of his excellent performance in a variety of highly sensitive and important activities both at home and abroad.

Jean Evans retired from the U.S. Army Reserve with the rank of colonel in 1972. His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, and Army Commendation Medal, and the French Government Gratitude Medal.

Mr. President, it should be clear from this résumé that the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence was very lucky to find a man of Jean Evans' background and qualifications to serve as professional staff member to our committee. He was originally nominated to become a staff member of the committee in the spring of 1976 by Senator ROBERT T. STAFFORD of Vermont. Subsequently, he served Senator CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS, JR., of Maryland. In recent years, he has been serving as a member of the core staff of the committee with a specialty in counterintelligence.

Mr. President, on behalf of all the members of the committee, past and present, who have enjoyed their association with Jean Evans, I want to express my personal thanks to him for his support of our activities over the years. He has shown exceptional dedication, loyalty, integrity, and distinguished service to the Select Committee on Intelligence, to the Senate and to the Congress of the United States. We are grateful to him for his contributions to our Nation's defense and to our Nation's security. We wish him all the best for the future.●

CAN AMERICA MANAGE ITS SOVIET POLICY

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Prof. Joseph S. Nye, Jr., has for many years been one of this country's leading authorities on United States-Soviet relations. Dr. Nye is professor of government at Harvard University, and served as Deputy Under Secretary of State from 1977-79. In a recent article entitled "Can America Manage Its Soviet Policy?" appearing in the spring issue of Foreign Policy, Professor Nye offers a perceptive evaluation of U.S. foreign policy toward the Soviet Union and the challenges facing the United States.

Professor Nye takes a look at the role of domestic politics in the United States and how it effects our foreign policy. He discusses the importance of a clearly defined expression of America's interests, cautious expectation of Soviet behavior, and an accurate assessment of American domestic politics. I believe that Professor Nye's article will be of great interest and value to all of my colleagues and I ask that it be printed at this time in the RECORD.

The article follows:

CAN AMERICA MANAGE ITS SOVIET POLICY?

(By Joseph S. Nye, Jr.)

American policy toward the Soviet Union has been replete with examples of incoherence and inconsistency. Responding in part to Soviet moves and in part to the political competition inherent in our democratic politics, American attitudes have alternated between overemphasis and underemphasis on the threatening nature of the Soviet Union. The result has been inconsistent policy and missed opportunities.

During the cold war, our exaggeration of Soviet capabilities prevented us from negotiating at a time when our position was strong. Subsequently, the ideological interpretation of policy and domestic political constraints prevented American policy from exploiting the diplomatic opportunities in the Sino-Soviet split for more than a decade after it occurred in the late 1950s. Conversely, the enthusiasm for détente in the 1960s and early 1970s led American officials to underestimate the Soviet military buildup, delay an appropriate response, and encourage false domestic expectations of future restraint in Soviet international behavior. Certainly, changing Soviet tactics have helped trigger American policy changes, but the exaggeration in American attitudes may develop as much from domestic political processes and reactions toward previous swings of the policy pendulum as from the actual changes in Soviet behavior.

In the early part of the 1970s, American power was limited by introspective moral and social concerns in the aftermath of Vietnam and Watergate. The United States spent less in real terms on defense, foreign aid, embassies and foreign broadcasting in 1980 than it did in 1960. Moreover, there was no political consensus on how to bring the non-military aspects of American power (such as our nearly two-to-one advantage in gross national product, our grain reserves, our advanced technology) to bear upon U.S.-Soviet relations. Different groups resisted linking issues or insisted on their preferred linkages. In these circumstances of shifting power domestic disagreement, and ambiguous rules of conduct, it was not surprising that Soviet tactics were adventuresome.

By the end of the decade, American attitudes had changed again, well before the 1980 election and even before the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. As American policies switched from détente to renewed hostility, one could not help but wonder how such changes occur, whether a policy with fewer oscillations would be more effective in managing the relationship, and whether the United States is institutionally and politically capable of following a consistent and coherent policy toward the Soviet Union.

II

The record of American policy since 1945 is far from perfect, but it has not been disastrous. Moreover, incoherence in the process may not be the key consideration. Effectiveness is more important than efficiency, and some periods of relatively efficient management may not have been the most effective. Could one not argue that despite its messiness, U.S. policy has been relatively successful in the postwar period?

At a high level of abstraction, the United States has sought three broad goals in its relationship with the Soviet Union: avoiding nuclear war; containing the spread of Soviet power and ideology; and gradually encouraging change in the nature and behavior of the Soviet Union. It is evident that the United States has been quite successful in the first of these objectives, and that it has also been successful, to a lesser extent, with respect to the second and third.

Nuclear war has been avoided as has all direct conflict (though not limited war with Soviet allies in Korea and Vietnam). Nuclear arsenals on both sides have grown greatly, but there have also been some substantial if imperfect efforts at arms control. Most important, the nuclear arms race has not led to nuclear conflict, and both sides have learned some prudent practices of crisis management since the Berlin and Cuba crises of the cold war period. Attributing credit may be difficult: the fact remains that war has been avoided.

Our success in relation to the second general objective, the containment of Soviet power and ideology, has been subject to more debate. There is the undeniable fact of increased Soviet military capability. During the cold war period the United States enjoyed a distinct nuclear military advantage, which it saw as balancing superior Soviet conventional capabilities. This strategic advantage was at its peak after the Kennedy buildup of the early 1960s. Faced with steady Soviet military growth, American policymakers in the mid-1960s concluded that trying to maintain strategic superiority would be both infeasible and too costly to attempt. Subsequently, Vietnam and domestic turmoil diverted resources away from the strategic budget until Soviet gains in some categories, particularly land-based missiles (ICBMs), led some Americans to fear that even rough parity had been lost. While the significance of ICBM vulnerability is highly contested, and few American officials have expressed willingness to trade forces with the Soviet Union, most Americans agree that Soviet military power has greatly increased since the early 1960s. They have tended to disagree, however, over how inevitable that change was, and how significant it was for our foreign policy objectives.

American success at political containment is also debated in part because of ambiguities over whether the goal was the containment of Soviet power or of communist ideology. Some argue that communism is the threat, whether dominated by Moscow or not. From this point of view, the existence of Marxist regimes in Angola, Laos, Vietnam, Kampuchea, Mozambique, South Yemen, Ethiopia, Afghanistan and Nicaragua is a serious setback for American foreign policy. Moreover, even those who do not worry about the ideological coloration of poor countries would admit that some of these governments are more susceptible to Soviet than to American influence. This represents an extension of Soviet influence to areas far beyond its borders.

On the other hand, it can be argued that there has been a diffusion of power from both superpowers since the 1950s. In key areas such as Europe and Japan, the political appeal of Soviet ideology has greatly diminished since the 1940s and 1950s. Yugoslavia began the fracturing of Soviet ideological power, and the Soviets as well as the United States "lost" China. The Soviets as well as the Americans have seen Third World clients collapse and governments turn hostile. Moreover, marginal Third World gains are nowhere nearly as significant to the global balance of power as the fact that the key areas of Western Europe, Japan and the Middle East—while geographically closer to the Soviet Union—have remained politically closer to the United States. In addition, the Soviet empire in Eastern Europe is far from the politically secure bastion that the Soviets might hope. In short, while the United States has not prevented the Soviets from gaining some influence in the Third World, from a geopolitical point of view the Soviets have tended to win the small ones rather than the big ones.

In terms of economic power, while the Soviet economy grew impressively in the postwar period up until recently, so also did the American economy. In fact, in recent years, the Soviet Union has not closed the economic gap with the United States and still remains at little better than half the size of the American economy. Khrushchev's 1959 claims to overtake and bury the United States have turned out to be hollow boasts. Although American economic preponderance has declined in the postwar period, with the U.S. share of gross world product dropping from 33 percent to 22 percent of the total over the past 30 years, this relative decline has not been matched by a commensurate Soviet gain. On the contrary, the Soviet share of gross world product also declined in the past decade from 12.5 percent to 11.5 percent of the total.[1] Moreover, most of the American loss of relative share in world product went not to the Soviet Union but to our allies in Europe and Japan. The recovery of Europe and Japan was our deliberate foreign policy objective, in part as a means of combating communist influence, and our success in maintaining those alliances means that our loss has not represented a Soviet gain.

A third general objective of American policy in the postwar period, albeit one that has not been pursued at all times, has been to encourage change in the nature and behavior of the Soviet Union. This has varied from George Kennan's conception in the 1940s of waiting for Soviet power to mellow to the Reagan Administration's efforts to use economic pressures to accelerate change inside the Soviet Union.

There have been significant changes in the Soviet Union. While Lenin's authoritarian party structure remains, Stalin's excesses have been alleviated. Some of these changes have been influenced by contacts with Western society. Awareness of Western affluence and ideas stimulates popular expectations and makes it more difficult for Soviet leaders to portray America in terms of simple "demonology." It is far less certain, however, that deliberate American government efforts have had significant results in bringing about social change inside the Soviet Union, and in some instances they have had contrary effects. From time to time, efforts to foster emigration, internal liberalization and human rights through quiet diplomacy or increased contacts have had some marginal beneficial effects. But this third objective is a difficult one to manage when dealing with a society like the Soviet Union, and it may just as well that, for the most part, this objective had tended to rank a distant third in our priorities.

Finally, one could argue that although oscillations have occurred in U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union, the behavior is not purely cyclical. Things never return to exactly where they were. And oscillations are more typical of some aspects of the relationship than of others. For example, if one looks at defense spending or public attitudes of trust in the Soviet Union, the oscillation is quite striking. But if one looks at trade and social exchanges, there has been a continuing upward trend rather than a reversion to the levels of earlier periods. The return to hostility since the late 1970s was not exactly the return to cold war which some observers had predicted. On the contrary, a residue of trade and contacts, as well as arms control negotiations and careful crisis management makes the current period of renewed hostility quite different from the 1950s trough in the cycle of attitudes.

Thus an optimist could argue that the United States has not done all that badly in pursuing its major objectives in the U.S.-Soviet relationship over the past four decades. The optimist might argue that American policy has been like a drunk coming home from a bar. He may wander from the path from time to time, and follow a circuitous and inefficient route, but the important point is that he eventually reaches home.

A pessimist would be less complacent. Maybe we have just been lucky thus far. Some of the wanderings were prolonged and painful detours, and in a nuclear age there is always the danger of a disastrous fall into an open manhole. Moreover, the metaphor can be misleading in implying that there is ever an end to the continuing need to be attentive in managing the relationship. Even if one agrees that the postwar record has not been all that bad, there are significant past and potential costs to a policy marked by incoherence and inconsistency. Certainly the recent experience of negotiating major agreements in trade and arms control and then failing to ratify them, or of applying sanctions inconsistently, makes it difficult to build a long-term framework for managing the relationship. There are several reasons why an inefficient process is likely to have costs, if only the cost of opportunities foregone. It may be that equivalent or better outcomes could be achieved at less cost to our society if we followed a more coherent and consistent policy process.

First, oscillation and incoherence can be costly in terms of encouraging Soviet intransigence, as well as wariness about cooperative U.S. positions when we turn toward them. Desired Soviet responses to our tactical moves will be delayed if Soviet leaders learn that by simply waiting they will find that the United States will drop the tactic and turn to something else. In negotiations, after the Soviets reject an American proposal, parts of the American polity often spend their time bargaining publicly with each other rather than with the Soviet Union.

Second, and more dangerous, incoherence and inconsistency can lead to Soviet misperceptions of American intentions and concerns. Stalin must certainly have been surprised by Truman's reaction in Korea so soon after the U.S. secretary of state had declared it to be outside our defense perimeter. Krushchev seems to have been surprised by Kennedy's reaction to the installation of Soviet missiles in Cuba so soon after accepting defeat in the Bay of Pigs episode. In the 1970s, the Soviets argued that the fall of Saigon and the failure to respond in Angola indicated that it was the vague Marxist notion of a historical change in the "correlation of forces" between capitalism and socialism which was compelling the United States to follow a policy of détente; they may have surprised by renewed demands for defense spending and the return of a period of hostility at the end of the decade.

Soviet intentions are opaque to us because of Soviet secrecy. Our intentions may be opaque to them because of incoherence and cacaphony. If they are a "black box" to us, we may confuse them with "white noise." Efforts to sort out our intended from unintended signals and to understand the intentions of our policy must be difficult for the Soviets. For example, even practiced observers of the American scene disagreed on how to interpret the episode of an alleged Soviet combat brigade in Cuba in 1979—a clumsily handled incident that set back the ratification of strategic arms limitation talks (SALT II). Some saw it as an accidental product of the impending presidential election campaigns, others believed it was "no accident," but a signal that Carter had turned his back on détente and arms control. Sometimes creating uncertainty in the mind of an adversary can enhance deterrence. On the other hand, misperceptions may lead to unintended confrontations in which deterrence can break down. In dealing with a stronger Soviet Union in an age of nuclear parity, the United States may not have as much leeway for incoherence, inconsistency and inefficiency as we had in earlier periods. In an age when two such disparate societies aim 50,000 nuclear weapons at each other, the costs of miscalculation could be catastrophic.

A third cost of incoherence and inconsistency lies in weakening support from our allies and other countries. This might be called the "third audience problem." Most foreign policy issues involve at least two audiences. Political leaders try to mobilize domestic support for their policies as well as to send signals to foreign governments. But an effective policy toward the Soviet Union involves more than just the U.S. public and the Soviet government.

Success in balancing Soviet power is dependent on allying major countries to the United States rather than to the Soviet Union, and the economic role of other countries is becoming increasingly important. An effective strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union cannot be considered in bilateral terms alone. With reduced American preponderance, more attention must be given to the concerns of allied and other countries. Oscillation and inconsistency confuse not only the Soviets, but also our allies, and make it more difficut to maintain a common position. Not only was it impossible to obtain allied agreement to cancel the natural gas pipeline from the Soviet Union after the United Stated had lifted its embargo against Soviet grain exports, but the effort to do so managed to turn an East-West issue into a West-West dispute and presented the Soviets with a political windfall. Of course, dividing the Western Alliance has been a longstanding Soviet foreign policy objective, and maintaining such alliances is a key to an effective U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union.

Thus, one can agree with the optimist that the overall management of the U.S.-Soviet relationship in the postwar period has not proven disastrous—but also accept the pessimist's argument that the past and potential costs of incoherence and inconsistency involved in the management of the policy are too high to allow one to feel comfortable for the future.

III

No foreign policy can be fully consistent. By its nature, foreign policy involves balancing competing objectives in a frustrating and changeable world. Every country faces a problem of relating ends and means—of defining its goals and interests so that they can be met within available levels of resources.

The inconsistency and incoherence in American foreign policy, however, are deeply rooted in our political culture and institutions. The eighteenth-century founders of the Republic deliberately chose to deal with the danger of tyrannical power by fragmenting and balancing rather than centralizing and civilizing the exercise of power. In a sense, a potential degree of incoherence and inconsistency in foreign policy is part of the price we pay for the way that was chosen to defend our freedoms.

In the constitutional "invitation to struggle" for control of foreign policy, the executive branch has certain natural advantages over the Congress. Even so, the Congress has a broad set of legitimate means to block, divert or alter foreign policy initiatives if it so chooses. The system tends to work best when two conditions are fulfilled: first, when the President has a relatively coherent strategy and a smooth policy process in the executive branch and, second, when there is a general executive-legislative compact, sometimes symbolized as "bipartisanship" in foreign policy. By and large, this was the situation during the cold war, when relative harmony between the branches of government rested on congressional deference to the President on the big things; sufficient centralization in the Congress to foster congressional leadership; and a general consensus on the Soviet threat.

But one should not idealize the cold-war policy process. The cold war era was marked by difficulty in framing and maintaining support for a strategy that established a consistent and effective relationship between ends and means in American policy. This difficulty was exacerbated by our liberal political cultural reaction to the harsh reality of Soviet expansion, and the resulting excoriation of the Soviets in our electoral competition. When liberal moralism faced the reality of amoral Soviet policy, there was a sense of shock and indignation. Analogies were drawn to the 1930s and Stalin was portrayed as similar to Hitler. In such circumstances, it was difficult to sustain Kennan's conception of selective containment by limited means since it depended on "the ability of national leaders to make and maintain national distinctions between vital and peripheral interests, adversary capabilities and intentions, negotiations and appeasement, flexibility and direction."[2]

The exaggerated threat described in the Truman policy document, NSC-68, called for means that were far in excess of what was domestically feasible—which in turn was part of the reason for the exaggeration. A gap developed between election rhetoric and policy implementation. The Republicans spoke of "rolling back" communism in 1952, but within six months Eisenhower adopted more modest goals and his fiscal conservatism led him to reduce the demand for military means. Similarly, Kennedy came into office sounding like an echo of NSC-68, but later in 1963 he tried to adjust goals and means in a more modest direction in some aspects of policy (though not in Vietnam). In short, even in the cold war era when the parts of the political system worked relatively harmoniously with each other, that harmony had to be purchased at a considerable price.

In an effort to relate ends and means, Nixon and Kissinger developed a strategy that placed fewer demands on American resources. An opening to China was used as a means to encourage better Soviet behavior. Arms control agreements codified Soviet parity, but were also to constrain further Soviet growth as a period when our defense budget was under domestic attack. Trade and a web of cooperation agreements were tacitly lined to improved Soviet behavior in relation to Third World crises. The Nixon approach to détente was dictated not by goodwill toward the Soviet Union, but by the need to adjust to changes in Soviet military power and in American domestic conditions.

An effective foreign policy strategy must set forth a general long-run vision that combines a reasonable and persuasive assessment of Soviet intentions and capabilities, combined with a clear picture of our long-term goals and the feasibility of our means for achieving these goals. In that regard, the Nixon concept of a two-track approach combining selective containment with economic incentives made sense. Equally important, a strategy must include a third dimension, which is the domestic political acceptance of the strategy as desirable and feasible. In that area the Nixon-Kissinger strategy was not successful.

The usual explanation is that Watergate derailed the Nixon strategy. Watergate certainly had an effect in contributing to public mistrust and sapping executive strength. It may also have emboldened the Soviets to take greater risks. But the trouble with Watergate as a full explanation is that it pays insufficient heed to some of the deeper trends in the American political structure. Not only was the Nixon-Kissinger strategy overly ambitious in its broad definition of American interest, but it was difficult to implement in our political system. It relied on a degree of fine-tuning always difficult to manage. It relied on secrecy in a system in which the media is a virtual fourth branch of government. It depended upon personal control, which worked when things went well, but which left few congressional and bureaucratic allies to share the burden when things went poorly. Moreover, it provided insufficient points of access for allied countries to learn what was happening. Only when there is such access can allied leaders gradually adjust their policies without suffering public shocks that are jolting to democratic politicians.

Eventually the Nixon strategy succumbed to the typical American pressure to exaggeration as a means of building and maintaining consensus. It was not the more traditional exaggeration of the Soviet threat, but the exaggeration of the degree of change in the Soviet Union. Pressed by Vietnam and domestic turmoil, Nixon compensated by exaggerating the durability of the new structure of peace that was being created. Détente was oversold to the American public. The net effect was a sense of deception and disillusion in response to Soviet actions that, in turn, accentuated the ensuing swing of the cycle in the direction of renewed hostility.

At the same time, the domestic problems of the Nixon-Kissinger strategy were also related to the period. It might have been a more successful strategy in an earlier period, but by the late 1960s the American political constellation was undergoing profound changes that would have made any strategy difficult. A basic trend was the ideological realignment of the two major political parties that started with the Goldwater candidacy in 1964 and culminated in the Reagan election of 1980. During the two decades of realignment, party activists tended to pull the two parties away from the center. Not surprisingly, two of the casualties were the post-1941 bipartisan tradition in foreign policy and the related custom of deference to the President—two of the conditions that had helped to smooth relations between the separate branches of government in the cold war era.

In this period, American society was torn by reactions to the Vietnam War, reactions against the welfare state, the cultural changes of the 1960s, the revival of religious fundamentalism, and the economic and demographic rise of the South and West. Television played a role in forcing international news upon the noninternationalist majority of the public, and this increased the volatility in public attitudes. The corrosive effects on public trust of deceptive practices by Presidents Johnson and Nixon contributed to the development of anti-establishment attitudes.

Accompanying the rise of anti-establishment attitudes was the "democratization" of institutions. This took several forms. In the Congress, the weakening of seniority and the committee system opened opportunities for younger congressmen, but also weakened congressional leadership. The net effect was to make executive-legislative bargaining more difficult and to open the way for more enterprising congressmen (and ambitious staffs) to create surges in attention and neglect of various issues affecting U.S.-Soviet relations. In the society as a whole, the emphasis on participation and reduction in authority tended to erode deference to the President.

Thus the 1970s would have been a difficult period in which to implement any strategy of relations toward the Soviet Union, much less one that depended upon fine-tuning, linkage, secrecy and personal control. As the decade wore on and the conservative trend in the cycle of American politics strengthened, the domestic climate for detente worsened. Renewed hostility at the end of the decade was a product of the coincidence of a conservative trend in American politics interacting with a Soviet military buildup and the extension of Soviet-Cuban military influence in several Third World countries. Given the earlier American exaggeration of a benign shift in Soviet behavior at the height of detente, some increase in defense expenditures and toughening of attitudes was appropriate in 1970s, but the subsequent degree of renewed hostility was strongly affected by domestic politics.

IV

Looking ahead, there are grounds to hope for improvement in our management of relations with the Soviet Union. Public opinion at the mass level is still centrist in its demands for a policy that balances "peace and strength," though mass public opinion does not weigh international issues very intensely and events can pull the non-internationalist opinion (of those little concerned on a daily basis) back and forth between its dual concerns. More important is the fact that the process of party realignment may be nearing its completion, with the attendant effect that party activist opinion may move back toward the center as the activists focus on winning the mass vote rather than struggling for the soul of the party.

If so, the result may be a return to stronger and longer presidencies. This would alleviate the discontinuities caused by the turnover of the top of the executive branch in our system following each change of presidency. In addition, it could improve the prospects for bipartisanship in foreign policy and thus ease the struggles between the executive and legislative branches. An optimist might add the hope that economic constraints and the lessons of the 1970s may deter the new Soviet leadership from peripheral adventures of the sort that proved such irritants in American politics in the last decade.

But even if the optimists are correct, there are still problems to be faced, as we saw from our inspection of the cold war period. The problems of exaggeration will remain—though ironically, if the optimists are correct, the next exaggerations may be of a benign change in Soviet policy rather than the current exaggeration of the Soviet threat. Developing a clear strategy for the long run is not easy in American politics. Indeed, it is difficult for Americans to think of relations with the Soviet Union as a long-term process to be managed indefinitely rather than as a near-term problem to be "solved."

The first requirement for successful long-term management is a flexible strategy that combines a sensible vision of the future and definition of our interests with appropriate means in a manner that can sustain domestic support. Since 1947, there have been variants of one basic strategy—containment. The broadest choice in strategy is between containment and totally new approaches. If one assumes that options such as isolation or a U.S.-Soviet condominium are not feasible in domestic or international politics, then there are two basic alternatives to containment; one in the direction of a more active confrontation with the Soviet Union and the other in the direction of a less active American role.

Those who are deeply pessimistic about our ability ever successfully to manage Soviet relations might be tempted to urge a less active American role. From this point of view, the only sensible strategy is to encourage the development of a multipolar world in which Soviet power will be balanced and contained by others as much as by the United States. So long as nuclear bipolarity is combined with ideological rivalry, the

[2] John L. Gaddis, Strategies of Containment, New York: Oxford University Press, 1982, p. 88.

American public will remain obsessed with the Soviet Union, and election campaigns will press politicians toward exaggeration in the formulation of policy. In a truly multipolar world, one would logically have to consider the Soviet Union as a potential partner is shifting coalitions balancing Chinese, Japanese and European power. In such circumstances, our domestic politics could show less of a fixation on the Soviet Union, and policy might be easier to manage.

There are a number of problems with such a strategic vision. Our experience of multipolar balances comes from the pre-nuclear age. There may be greater dangers of miscalculation in the management of deterrence if coalitions shift quickly in the nuclear age. Moreover, even if the end result were desirable, it might be destabilizing to try to get from here to there, since the process could well involve the massive nuclear arming of Germany and Japan with uncertain effects on Soviet perceptions. In fostering such proliferation, we might be throwing wide open the lid on Pandora's nuclear box as others rush to emulation. Moroever, the benefits in terms of American politics and policies toward the Soviet Union may prove to be ephemeral. After all, there were ideological hostility and wide oscillations in our policies toward the Soviet Union in the period of multipolar balance before World War II.

There is a kernel of wisdom in the vision of the multipolar strategy. A degree of multipolarity exists at the political, if not the military, level. Containment of Soviet power is not a task for the United States alone, as Nixon's opening to China made clear. And the increased economic strength of Europe and Japan must be factored into any strategy. It is even conceivable that over the very long term, such a world may evolve. Yet a goal of creating such a world would not only be difficult to achieve: the mere setting of that goal would have the high cost of threatening the basis of the postwar alliance strategy that has worked so far, in return for uncertain domestic and international benefits in the future.

The other major alternative to containment is an active policy of confrontation designed to force change in the Soviet Union. At times the Reagan Administration has shown inclinations in this direction, though by and large the main lines of its policy have hewed to the existing path of containment. Those who urge a confrontation strategy offer a long-run vision of a Soviet empire in decline. Economic growth has slumped from six percent to roughly two percent a year. Corruption and inefficiency are rampant. Demographic trends could exacerbate the nationalities problem inside the Soviet Union, and there is restiveness in the empire in Eastern Europe. In these circumstances, it is argued, curtailment of trade and scientific exchanges and the threat of a new arms race could force the Soviets to change, or at least force the Soviets to turn from expensive external adventures to domestic economic reforms.

This strategy also raises fundamental questions. It it prudent in a world of nuclear-armed powers to try to press an opponent to the wall? The reckless performance of Austria-Hungary on the eve of World War I would indicate that declining empires can be very dangerous actors in a balance of power. Moreover, do we really know how to bring about reform in the Soviet Union? Is there good reason to believe that faced with a choice, the Soviets will choose butter rather than guns? Or that they can be prevented from producing adequate guns? A recent CIA report indicates that "the ability of the Soviet economy to remain viable in the absence of imports is much greater than that of most, possibly all, other industrialized countries. . . . Consequently the susceptibility of the Soviet Union to economic leverage tends to be limited." [3]

Nor is it clear that in a period of low economic growth we have the means to implement such a strategy, either in terms of budgetary resources or in the curtailment of trade that is profitable to significant electoral groups like farmers, or to our allies. The effort to enforce such a strategy would certainly prove costly, yet the historical record shows that Soviet resistance is likely to be far more coherent and sustained than will be American persistence or consistency in the strategy. Once again, we are faced with a strategic option which presents formidable problems of feasibility combined with high present costs in return for very uncertain future benefits.

Thus the difficulties of the alternatives, both in terms of the uncertainty of their goals and the feasibility of their means, drive us back to the historically proven center ground of containment. But there are many paths among which to choose in the center, and the slogan of containment can be misleading. If containment is thought of as balancing Soviet power by a variety of political and diplomatic means, then it is merely the traditional common sense of international politics. But if containment implies a broad definition of American interests that leads to efforts to counter every Soviet or Soviet-allied action in the Third World, it would soon surpass our means, including the critical resource of domestic political support. The lesson of Vietnam is that an overly ambitious definition of interests which creates a gap between ends and means can lead to severe oscillations in foreign policy attitudes. One might label a centrist strategy as "containment with communication" or a "managed balance-of-power" approach.

V

The important point is that conflict with the Soviet Union is endemic in the structure of the bipolar relationship. Hopes to terminate the conflict quickly by accommodation or victory are unlikely to be realized. The problem is one of long-term management. At the same time, successful management of a balance of power requires communication and negotiation among the opponents. And a successful foreign policy for managing such a balance requires reliance upon multiple sources of strength—economic, political, military—and a selectivity in goals which relates ends and means. There are three principles to guide such a strategy.

First is the importance of a moderate design to insure that policy can be durable and robust. Some aspects of our policy process can be improved, but others are deeply rooted in our political culture and institutions. Our problems are more constitutional than organizational. There are no quick fixes. A basic principle for a durable strategy is to cut the coat of foreign policy to fit the rather rare eighteenth-century domestic cloth that we have inherited. The importance of this principle cannot be overstated: fine-tuning is impossible, secrecy difficult, oversimplification likely, and pluralism of views of the Soviet Union unavoidable. Thus a successful strategy must be moderate in three ways: in its definition of American interests; in its cautious rather than optimistic expectations of Soviet behavior; and in its assessment of American politics—meaning a hardheaded appraisal of what resources the electorate will devote to what interests and for how long. This does not mean a low profile in countering Soviet power. On the contrary, it means recognizing that only a moderate strategy will be robust enough to survive our domestic climate and durable in the face of any tendency toward pendular swings in attitudes. Only a moderate strategy will allow leaders to close the gap between ends and means. The point seems obvious until one reflects on how often we have failed to achieve it.

A second principle is that the Soviet Union is also unlikely to change quickly, but it does evolve slowly and unevenly. We will continue to be faced with a closed and secretive society which is difficult to understand. On the other hand, the Soviet Union has opened up somewhat over the past 30 years. There are more contacts. There is more sophistication in the perception of outside reality. There are more pinholes letting light into the black box. Moreover, recognition of this second principle helps with our domestic politics. Specifying a broadly shared long-range goal is an important precondition for giving legitimacy to the policy choices needed to undergird a durable strategy. Avoiding nuclear war by balancing Soviet power and gradually reducing the risks associated with nuclear deterrence is such a goal. If misperception and miscalculation are the conditions most likely to foster a breakdown of nuclear deterrence, then one of the long-term security objectives in our strategy should be to encourage that process of evolving transparency and communication.

The Soviet Union remains opaque to us, as a number of legislators noted when trying to decide on how to vote on the MX missile. "When you play cards against someone," noted Congressman Dan Glickman of Kansas, "you ought to know something about them. Unfortunately, our judgments turn out to be highly subjective for the most part." Or in the words of Senator Richard Lugar of Indiana, "We try to figure out where they're coming from, but it could well be the blind leading the blind."[4] Increased contact and communication can help to poke holes in the "black box" of Soviet society and gradually increase its transparency.

Change inside the Soviet Union will be gradual and hard to gauge, and we can at best encourage, rather than hope to guide it. Nonetheless, this possibility suggests that a managed balance-of-power strategy should involve routine and regular communication. From this point of view, our tactics should include engaging the Soviets in prolonged strategic discussions; holding talks at high level on force structure and stabilization measures; and efforts to consider crisis prevention techniques, not necessarily in the expectation of signing formal agreements, but as a means of enhancing transparency. It also follows that trade, scientific and cultural exchanges, and tourism should be evaluated by the same standard and not solely by the current criteria of economic benefits and short-term security interests. A managed balance-of-power strategy does not rest on expectations that increasing engagement will win Soviet trust or greatly constrain Soviet actions. Nor does it rest on any immediate liberalizing effects of "goulash communism." In the first instance, it rests on the importance of enhancing transparency and communication.

The third principle to guide a more consistent strategy is that indirect means of containing or balancing Soviet power are as important as our direct dealings with the Soviets. Both because the Soviets will resist efforts to change them quickly, and because our politics tend to undermine our own persistence in pursuing such efforts, our direct efforts will often face frustration. An indirect approach is more likely to succeed both at home and abroad. We may be most successful in containing Soviet power by constraining their opportunities in the rest of the world. Maintaining the Western Alliance has been the key to the success of containment thus far, and this is an area where the pluralism of American institutions can be a help rather than a hindrance by providing multiple points of access and reassurance.

The growing complexity of world politics, with more actors and issues, and the inevitability of turmoil in the Third World mean that we can never hope to completely control the milieu of world politics as an element in a strategy of containment. But a recognition of these problems and of the diffusion of economic power to our allies should reinforce our attention to the indirect dimensions of our policy in managing relations with the Soviet Union. A stong world economy with effective linking among the non-communist market economies may be a more robust economic strategy than one which tries to fine-tune East-West trade. An effective strategy rests on the comparative advantage of America's economic power and presence in the world economy as well as on the traditional political and military aspects of balancing Soviet power.

In addition to these basic principles, a managed balance-of-power strategy has important implications for dealing with the main issues in the relationship: defense, crisis management, trade and human rights. Managing the defense and nuclear issue is basic. A strong defense and clear signals are essential for an effective policy of deterrence toward the Soviet Union, and domestic and allied confidence in the strength of our deterrent is a necessary condition for all the rest of policy toward the Soviets. Uncertainty about security exacerbates the domestic debate and hinders effective steps toward arms control. The practice of exaggerating the Soviet threat as a means of generating support for the defense budget encourages inconsistency when the public eventually reacts to the exaggeration. To counter this tendency requires improving estimates, integrating arms control with defense planning, negotiating in smaller (but related) packages, and avoiding the rhetorical excesses that prove disruptive to retaining allied and domestic support for a consistent defense program over the long term.

In the area of crisis prevention and crisis management we should eschew large dramatic gestures and formal agreements such as those of 1972 and 1973, but engage the Soviets in quiet discussions of classic techniques (neutralization, buffer states, spheres of concern) for avoiding crisis escalation. Such talks could extend or be related to discussions of nonproliferation of nuclear weapons or of particularly dangerous conventional weaponry. Equally important will be efforts at home to redefine our interests in the less expansive terms of selective containment. As originally outlined by George Kennan, the most cost-effective way of containing Soviet power was through reliance on the nationalistic currents of other states. This entails learning to live with disagreeable regimes, and distinguishing those Third World situations where our interests would be deeply invoved (e.g., Saudi Arabia) from those where they are less centrally involved (e.g., Southeast Asia).

A cricital problem, of course, is maintaining domestic support for carefully graded degrees of interest in Third World conflicts, particularly since adventuresome Soviet policies such as those pursued in the 1970s may create a degree of American interest where none existed before. And such questions can become weapons in domestic political debates. Two devices can be used to prevent such debates from driving a managed balance-of-power strategy seriously off course. The first is presidential education of the public about the problem of limited ends and means. The second is a continuing quiet dialogue with the Soviet Union about the interests they should have in the process of crisis prevention, if they wish to avoid a repitition of the escalation in public hostility toward the Soviet Union in the 1970s with its concomitant effects on defense issues and trade. This is not the tactic of linkage; rather it is educating the Soviets in the inevitability of inherent linkage through a better understanding of public opinion in the United States.

As for the economic component of a managed balance-of-power strategy, we must avoid too ambitious an approach. While it is important to control a narrow set of technologies where we are sure of the direct military relevance, we know too little about the net effect on the Soviet economy and have too poor a grasp of our own or of allied political processes to engage in a policy of detailed linkage or fine-tuned leverage. The signals we would try to send would inevitably come across as too confusing to justify the costs that we would incur in trying to send them. Because interest groups will always be hard to control—witness Reagan's capitulation to the farmers—and the effects of restrictions on the Soviet Union are debatable, it is better to focus controls on those situations (such as trade in technology that shortens military lead times) where a clear and present danger is demonstrable.

Moreover, an effective policy of broad denial is simply not available at levels of cost acceptable to the Western Alliance—which remains a central factor in a balance-of-power strategy. Whatever Americans may think of the wisdom of their position, the Europeans and Japanese can be expected to weigh the economic dimensions of any policy toward the Soviet Union quite heavily. At the same time, any effective efforts at denial will increasingly require their cooperation. Since a broad denial policy is ruled out as infeasible and costly to Alliance relations, the United States should concentrate on obtaining Alliance agreement to restrict a narrow set of strategic technologies. It is critical that disputes over East-West economic ties not be allowed to disrupt an effective intra-Western trading system. In short, the American comparative advantage lies in strengthening the open international economy in which we loom large and the Soviets small, rather than squandering Western unity over futile efforts to prevent the Soviets from gaining any benefits from that economy.

Finally, we need caution and realism in our expectations of bringing about social and political change in the Soviet Union. An idealistic concern for human rights is a domestic American reality which a managed balance-of-power strategy must accept. Americans cannot live by balance of power alone. Nonetheless, a confrontational human rights policy is likely to be counterproductive in terms of the interests of Soviet citizens. Sometimes, however, minor improvements can be made through quiet diplomacy. In general, the fate of human rights in the Soviet Union is adversely affected by the worsening of the overall climate of U.S.-Soviet relations. Government actions that promote social contact and quiet diplomacy rather than public government efforts targeted at individuals or Soviet policies are more likely to serve both human rights and our long-term objective of enhancing the degree of transparency and communication in the relationship.

VI

Even if a managed balance-of-power strategy must be matched with American political reality, there are still some specific steps that might be taken to improve the quality of the fit. One device would be to establish a joint legislative-executive "Soviet assessment commission" to produce an annual assessment of the military, economic, and political aspects of the Soviet Union and its policies. Four members might be appointed by the President and four by the opposition leadership in the Congress. They might jointly select a ninth member to chair them. Their task would be to assess intelligence information and produce an annual report which would be the subject of annual hearings before the foreign affairs committees (or possibly a joint select committee). Such a report need not, indeed probably would not, be unanimous; but it could provide the focal point for debates which might well have a more central tendency than the current situation where zealous congressional staffers (usually from the wings of the two parties) work with executive-branch leakers to produce a national debate over estimates that stress extreme positions. For example, a commission could lead to a more careful discussion of the intelligence estimates on Soviet military spending that are currently often misused to support particular objectives.[5] While a Soviet assessment commission is not a panacea, presidential commissions have frequently worked to depoliticize issues in American politics, and this pattern might be adapted to an interbranch mechanism.

A variety of suggestions have also been made for organizational improvements of the executive branch's conduct of Soviet policy. For example, Marshall Brement, a State Department official with Soviet experience, has suggested the appointment of one official to oversee all aspects of the relationship; creation of a special bureau in the State Department; and improved development and use of expertise, including our Embassy in Moscow.[6] Others have suggested that centralization of control over special subjects such as technology transfer be located in the White House. Such organizational changes have their pros and cons, depending on the circumstances of particular administrations and the presidential style in foreign policy. But they are of minor importance when compared with the question of a clear executive process and the importance of having a single authoritative spokesman on foreign affairs. The Carter Administration developed a useful interagency coordinating procedure to inform the diverse arms of the executive branch of the various activities in U.S.-Soviet relations, but such a procedure was dwarfed in importance by the President's lack of clear strategy and failure to insure that only one person spoke for him on the issue.

[5] "CIA specialists responsible for Soviet military spending now say that their previous estimates of increases of 3 to 4 percent each year, after inflation, may be wrong and the rate of growth may have been no more than 2 percent." The New York Times, March 3, 1982, p. 1. The problems lie not in CIA methodology, but in political misuse of inherently uncertain estimates.

[6] Marshall Brement, "Organizing Ourselves to Deal with the Soviets," RAND Corporation Study P-6123, Santa Monica, 1978.

The American system allows only one czar of U.S.-Soviet relations—the President—and he should either use his secretary of state as his sole spokeman or replace him. While the National Security Council must play a role in coordinating the efforts of many agencies, the role of the National Security Advisor should be restricted to that of facilitator of the policy process. Not only would this clarify who is in charge, but using the State Department provides more regular access for allies and a better use of our own expertise.

The issue of expertise in the executive branch is important. Although controversy over the U.S.-Soviet issue in domestic politics has always tended to tar the experts, that tendency seems to have grown worse in the past decade. Moreover, bureaucratic conflict in Washington increases the temptation to deal with the Soviet Embassy in Washington rather than go through the difficult process of clearing instructions to be sent to our embassy in Moscow. The result is to deprive ourselves of the benefit of important expertise. And the use of our embassy provides more occasions for our ambassador to make contact with top Soviet officials, as well as to insure that the messages are delivered in the terms that are intended.

Using our expertise is crucial when one is dealing with societies organized as differently as the United States and the Soviet Union. Soviet leaders are recruited by very different routes, and their frame of reference is unique to their own society. The temptation of mirror-image thinking even infects some intelligence analysts. The intelligence services have tended to share rather than counteract the assumptions common to Washington at any given time. The remedy must be a greater investment and broader institutional use and protection for people specially trained to understand the Russian language and Soviet political culture.

Greater public sophistication about the Soviet Union is also an important component of improvements that have been suggested at the attitudinal level. Educational efforts in schools and for the media can help. But most important is the President's use of what Teddy Roosevelt called the "bully pulpit." No other figure in the society commands the same attention. Presidents can help to shape public attitudes to expect less drama, fewer "solutions," and more consistent long-term management involving both conflict and cooperation in U.S.-Soviet relations. They can also stress the importance of a strategy which is more modest in defining interests, and combines balancing Soviet power (by various means) with communication and continuous engagement.

The way a president presents his programs can have a strong effect on the public attitudes that are necessary to sustain his efforts. Given that public opinion polls show sustained support for a policy of "peace and strength," a two-track policy would seem a natural one in terms of domestic as well as international politics. But the non-internationalist majority can be pulled back and forth between its two concerns by random events and electoral campaigns. Depending on which value seems more threatened at the moment, the non-internationalist majority is drawn into a coalition with those who stress peace or those who stress strength. In practice, presidential leadership and communication are essential ingredients in explaining to the public how the balance is being maintained between firmness and cooperation in the actual implementation of a two-track policy. The best hope to moderate this volatility in attitudes is for a president to elaborate a two-track approach such as the managed balance-of-power strategy.

VII

In sum, while a number of specific measures can be taken to improve the process by which we manage our relations with our principal adversary, there are strict limits to what such changes can achieve. We can alleviate the tendency to oversimplify and exaggerate which tends to amplify the oscillations in our policy. We can improve executive and legislative procedures and try to reduce the incoherence of different parts of our polity speaking with different voices or taking contradictory actions. And we can hope that the tides in our storms of political realignment will eventually ebb sufficiently to allow the return of the centrist orientation, bipartisan policy, and cooperation between the branches that reduce the excesses that otherwise grow out of our constitutional structure.

But our political culture and institutions do not change quickly, or easily. The implications of this simple-sounding proposition are very significant. It means that there will always be limits to the types of strategies that we can successfully follow. As stated earlier, our ability to manage the Soviet relationship is less a matter of organization than of choosing an appropriate strategy. The basic principle for a durable strategy is to cut the foreign policy coat to fit our domestic political cloth.

This does not mean appeasing the Soviet Union or failing to balance Soviet power. Quite the contrary. What it means is that if we pick an inappropriately ambitious strategy, we will fail in the long run, because the American domestic political process will produce oscillations and inconsistency. In a nuclear age, we ignore such reality at our peril.

An appropriate strategy must be modest enough to fit our domestic capabilities; it must focus on indirect effects through maintaining our alliances as much as on the direct bilateral relationship with the Soviet Union; and it should combine balancing Soviet power with economic engagement and continual communication. Over time, such a strategy may gradually increase the transparency in the relationship, reducing the dangers of miscalculation and increasing somewhat our understanding of what goes on within the opaque Soviet society. Our strategy should not only manage the current threat of Soviet power, but should gradually seek to improve the conditions that make it so difficult for a society organized such as ours is to manage the relationship with the Soviet Union.●

COLUMBUS-CUNEO-CABRINI MEDICAL CENTER

(By request of Mr. BAKER, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, on behalf of many thousands of satisfied patients and other appreciative people, I would like to take this opportunity to call attention to the outstanding record of medical service rendered for nearly 80 years by Columbus-Cuneo-Cabrini Medical Center. This institution has truly lived up to the high standards begun by its founder, Mother Cabrini. In her honor, this medical center has conferred the Mother Cabrini Award, since 1975, upon humanitarians. This year's award recipients are Mr. Irv Kupcinet and Mr. Stephen Ruff, Sr.

As we near the 10th anniversary of the Mother Cabrini Award, it is fitting that our gratitude be expressed. At a time when the medical community is under intense pressure to minimize costs, this medical center is particularly noteworthy. I ask my colleagues to extend their congratulations and good wishes to Columbus-Cuneo-Cabrini and hope that the next 80 years will be as productive.●

SCORE CELEBRATES 20 YEARS

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to draw attention to the 20th anniversary of a program which has assisted countless small businesses throughout the country.

I speak of SCORE, the Service Corps of Retired Executives, sponsored by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

SCORE is comprised of retired executives and professionals who have successfully completed their own active business careers. They now offer their services, at no charge, to assist present and potential small business people. If a small business person desires advice to plan and manage a business better and more profitably, SCORE stands ready to counsel.

The volunteer counselors are all experienced and seasoned in their fields which include: retailers, wholesalers, accountants, engineers, lawyers, office managers, plant managers, sales managers, and many more. In my home State of Michigan more than 120 counselors are available for the asking.

Since being established in 1964, SCORE has counseled thousands of small businesses. Some who sought assistance were people thinking of starting or buying a business; others were established but making poor progress; and several had been operating successfully but were thinking of expanding or making substantial changes. The sizes of businesses have varied from individual proprietorships with a few thousand dollars in sales, to corporations with several hundred thousand dollars in sales.

I am pleased to have this opportunity to commend the valuable service provided by SCORE and to recognize the hundreds of volunteers who make this program a success.●

THE WATER RESOURCES BILL

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, as we enter the traditional legislative crush near the end of the legislative session, the Senate is planning to consider S. 1739, the Water Resources Development Act—either on its own or in the context of the continuing resolution. This measure represents the fine and notable efforts of many concerned legislators to properly authorize, after many years, some deserving and necessary Corps of Engineers projects. However, in our eagerness to press on with many of these projects, it is important not to forget the degree of fiscal responsibility that we owe the taxpayers of this Nation.

With a Federal deficit hovering around $175 billion, we can no longer afford to continue our full Federal spending for inland waterway projects and their upkeep. The Stafford-Abdnor-Randolph-Moynihan suggestion to use the Inland Waterway Trust Fund for the construction of new projects is a good start, but it is not nearly enough. Even under this proposal the Federal Government would continue to completely finance the existing construction, as well as the ever-increasing operations and maintenance costs.

In order to reduce the Federal cost of this measure, as well as to enhance the quality of the inland waterway system, I am planning to offer an amendment that would establish a Federal spending cap on operation and maintenance costs. In addition, my amendment would authorize the use of funds from the Inland Waterway Trust Fund to cover any operation and maintenance costs that exceed the Federal cap.

I believe this amendment is necessary for many reasons. First, and foremost, the amendment would assist in protecting the Government—in a very fair and reasonable manner. Traditionally, the Federal Government has picked up the entire tab on the inland waterway system—something we can no longer afford to do. Even by using the trust fund for new construction, the taxpayers would still be kicking in existing construction and operations and maintenance costs. In terms of actual dollars, this means approximately $600 million for fiscal year 1985. Estimates for these two categories predict a cost of over $650 million by fiscal year 1989.

Second, this amendment would greatly benefit the industry, since a cap on O&M funds would encourage careful and thoughtful consideration before needlessly expending large sums of money for border-line projects and maintenance. I have been in this business long enough to realize that when users are not financially contributing to the cost of a project, there is a rather strong and certain tendency to maintain or build a project even if it is not necessary.

Third, this is an extremely fair and reasonable cap. O&M costs for past fiscal years have been below that level as well as the projected level of O&M cost for fiscal year 1985. Since the Corps of Engineers will anticipate the yearly cap, their O&M tasks will become more streamlined and efficient. In addition, new construction will only be affected to the extent the Corps of Engineers exceeds the cap and their ever present aggressiveness to build large and costly projects. The funds from the expanding trust fund will adequately fund new and necessary projects for years to come without an increase in the fuel tax—provided there is wise and prudent planning.

In essence, Mr. President, my amendment would attempt to rein in the ever-increasing Federal costs of the inland waterway system, while also encouraging the waterway industry and the Corps of Engineers to look diligently and closely at their operations and make every attempt to become more efficient and cost-effective.

Mr. President, I now ask that the following proposed amendment be introduced into the RECORD:

SIMPSON AMENDMENT TO THE ABDNOR AMENDMENT

Add new sections, Sec. 501(c) and 501(d):

SEC. 501(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall obligate a sum not to exceed a ceiling of $450,000,000 from general revenues for the rehabilitation, renovation, operation, and maintenance of the commercial navigation features and components of the inland waterways and harbors of the United States in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986 and in each of the succeeding fiscal years through September 30, 1996.

SEC. 501(d) Funds from the Inland Waterways Trust Fund may be used to cover spending that exceed the annual ceiling on operation and maintenance expenditures.●

ORDER THAT HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 648 BE PRINTED WITH AMENDMENTS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 648 be printed with amendments as recommended by the Stock fund price reestimate on Appropriations and that this print be considerd to be the official version in the consideration of this bill by the Senate.

I might state parenthetically what this does is make it possible for the Senate to consider the House-passed bill without any complications. It will not jeopardize any Member of the Senate and it will put us in the mode of being able to go to conference with the House of Representatives on the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alaska?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I am sure I will not object, the ordering of the request does not mean that the amendments are being adopted but merely that they are being printed.

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator is correct. They will still be printed as committee amendments but they will be printed as amendments to the House-passed bill. When the Senate Appropriations Committee was in committee it was marking up a Senate version of the bill. And we will now print House Joint Resolution 648 with the amendments as recommended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations to that bill.

Mr. BYRD. But the amendments will not ipso facto be considered as agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. No. They will still be presented to the Senate, and I am delighted to have this colloquy with my good friend to make sure that everyone understands that no one's rights are jeopardized by our making this request. It is for the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. I thank my friend and I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4855

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur with the House amendments with a further Senate amendment which I send to the desk in behalf of Senator HATCH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], for Mr. HATCH, proposes an amendment numbered 4855.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed under amendments submitted during routine morning business.)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am introducing an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 2574, a Senate-passed bill amended by the House of Representatives on September 6, 1984, to incorporate the text of H.R. 5602. H.R. 5602 is an omnibus health bill relating to certain provisions of the Public Health Service including: First, reauthorization of the Nurse Training Act (title VIII of the Public Health Service); second, reauthorization of the Health Professions Training Assistance Act (title VII of the Public Health Service Act); third, reauthorization of the National Health Service Corps; fourth, reauthorization of the primary health-care block grant; and fifth, reauthorization of the Health Maintenance Organization Act.

All of these reauthorizations were previously covered by bills which passed the Senate earlier this year. To facilitate conference with our House colleagues, the amendment I am offering in the form of a substitute text is these bills, as passed by the Senate. This will enable us to conference with our colleagues in the House of Representatives on all five pieces of legislation. These earlier bills are: S. 2574, the Nurse Education Amendments of 1984 which passed the Senate by voice vote on June 28, 1984 (Senate Rept. 98-492); S. 2559, the Health Professions Training Assistance Act reauthorization of 1984, which passed the Senate with amendments by voice vote on June 28, 1984 (Senate Rept. 98-491); S. 2308, the Primary Health Care Amendments which passed the Senate with amendments by voice vote on June 28, 1984 (Senate Rept. 98-401); and S. 2281, the National Health Service Corps Reauthorization Act, which passed the Senate with amendments by voice vote on May 10, 1984 (Senate Rept. 98-392).

No changes have been made in these bills since their Senate approval. I urge expeditious approval by the Senate in order that we may conference with our colleagues in the House and continue limited Federal support for educational assistance to help professional students and primary-care medical services where they are most critically needed. I would ask in addition, that the following conferees be appointed on behalf of the Labor and Human Resources Committee: Senators HATCH, STAFFORD, QUAYLE, KENNEDY, and RANDOLPH.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer [Mr. TRIBLE] appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. RANDOLPH conferees on the part of the Senate.
